“I have a seat in the abandoned theater

the final act without longing ... not because of anything other than that the play was not written

Chaos

as in the war days of those in despair, and an autobiography of the spectators’ impulse. The actors were tearing up their scripts and searching for the author among us, we the witnesses

I tell my neighbor the artist: Don’t draw your weapon, and wait, unless you’re the author!

—No

Then he asks me: And you are you the author?

Abstract

The importance of English-language translation of Palestinian authors in shaping Palestinian identity has long been a controversial subject hampered in part by the lack of an empirical and reliable digital database encompassing all of the Arabic-Palestinian literary titles translated into English from 1948 until the time of writing (i.e. late 2019). Thus, I aim herein to conduct a data-mining project which would itself advance the Palestinian question and raise the profile of the Palestinian literati alike. According to the idea that the Palestinian literary body is a quilt stitched with disillusionments and presents an entire picture of Palestinians under the circumstances of exile, occupation, deportation, mass killing, this research project harnesses the digital humanities to build a digital archive up whereby lay readers and relevant authorities can track the developments of Palestinian literature presented in English translation throughout the last seventy years. By doing so, non-Arabic speaking audience could be kept informed on any developments in that respect.

Over 1100 Palestinian literary entries in English translations, mostly single poems and short stories, have been recorded in this research project's digital catalogue. This research adopts a variety of methods to arrive at the numbers of Arabic-Palestinian titles presented in English translations from 1948 up until to now. I did thousands of searches to gather as many names of Palestinian authors as I could. For that purpose, I used Facebook accounts, email addresses, phone calls, internet searches and websites. With the help of the eScience-Centre of the University of Tübingen, I was able to construct the digital database to map the accumulated archive of Palestinian literary categories in English translations.

Overall, I conclude that Palestinian literature in English-language translations is approximately 4.6% of the total numbers of Arabic-Palestinian literary works, and such English translations should be visible to a non-Arabic speaking readership. It is also hoped this digital resource will let cultural institutions, authors, literary scholars, translation students and amateurs get opportunity of the most required data to do further research in the area of Palestinian-English translation literature.

Chapter 1: Introduction

1.1 General background

The aim of this study is to construct a digital database of English-language translations of Arabic-language literary works (poetry, prose, drama, autobiography, novel...etc.) on the Palestinian cause since 1948. It is motivated by the idea that this body of literary works presents a picture of modern Palestinian society to the world. Under the current circumstances of more than half-a century of occupation, exportation, diaspora and exile, Palestinian literature plays a vital role in public advocacy for the Palestinian cause. Palestinian literature is a thrilling quilt stitched with the experiences and suffering of the Palestinian citizens. The key task of this data-mining project is to harness the digital humanities to map the accumulated literary archive presented by English-language translations as a strategy in cultural diplomacy on the behalf of the Palestinian people.

Data-mining process in this context means the comprehensive compilation of English-language translations of Arabic-language literary works on the Palestinian question in one accessible archive. This digital archive will hopefully be a considerable resource for potential research in a variety of fields such as translation studies, comparative literature studies, political and Middle Eastern studies, post-colonial literature and so on and so forth.

A replica of the digital catalogue of Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019 can be found in the excel Appendix (1) that holds the same name and is attached to this project. It serves to provide the individuals and cultural and educational institutions with fundamental and essential information that traces the rendering and publishing of Palestinian literature into and in English over the last seventy years.

Not only does this project serve as a platform for the aforementioned areas of study, it will also supply a statistical foundation for the cultural institutions in Palestine and elsewhere. In other words, this study includes also a statistical section of the Palestinian literary works in Arabic since 1948. It takes the form of table at the end of this study. This statistical section serves to extract the accurate percentage of English-language translation of Palestinian literary works in the past seventy years.

Both the paper appendix and digital catalogue website of Palestinian literature in English translations provide data on the entire English-language translation movement of Palestinian literature, however, with different methods. In other words, Appendix (1) of this thesis entitled Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019 presents the translational information via a traditional way that makes for a time-consuming and laborious extraction of records to arrive at a complete image of the Palestinian literature in English-language translation, and the titles are less organized than those existing in the digital catalogue of the present project, which gives the same data while saving researcher's time and effort.

This study belongs to post-colonial scope of study. In other words, it focuses on the Palestinian literary masterpieces that were written in times following the British mandate of Palestine, and the start of a new era of occupation. Thus, it could enable further research in the field of comparative literature studies.

Furthermore, this study addresses gaps in the field which present inconsiderable difficulties to prospective researchers. The plain difficulty of getting the total number of the Palestinian literary works, including novels, short stories, volumes of poetry, plays, biographies, autobiography, books of prose texts presents a hurdle to prospective research on Palestinian literature. Another motivation for this study is the presenting of the English translations of modern Palestinian literature in the database. Further, it tracks the developments of the Palestinian cause in modern Arabic literature in general and in Palestinian literature in particular. The last reason that makes the research instrumental is the focus on the gradation of translating literary masterpieces from Arabic since 1948 until the present day.

1.2 Statement of problem

Hitherto, the question of how many Palestinian literary works were written in Arabic from 1948 to the present has been left unanswered. This deflects the attentions of researchers away from further engagement with the subject. Having examined websites, articles, books, I ascertain that neither institutional nor individual researchers have so far devoted themselves to the statistical representation of Palestinian literature. This in turn makes Palestinian literature little known to international cultural and translational institutions.

This research concludes that English translations of Palestinian literature do exist but they unfortunately are dispersed on different websites, articles and books. It means that the Palestinian writers' literary works in English translations are not taken seriously in considerations like other literatures in different translations, which the chapter (4), titled Centralized National Translation Online Resources thoroughly explains. That is to say, in the absence of an integrated source, from which the basic data on Palestinian authors in English translation can be taken, Palestinian literature will not be within the institutions' sphere of interest.

To go further deeply and accurately, the previous lines of this part of study affirm that the Palestinian literary works have been presented in English-language translations after the year of 1948. Nonetheless, not few numbers of such works are still short of the most basic information about the translation elements, including the name of the translator, the year of translation, the year and place of publication, the number of editions, and sometimes the English title itself. The question of how one might remove these obstacles to international appreciation of Palestinian literature.

1.3 Theoretical framework

From a theoretical point of view, this research work could make a significant contribution to the body of research on the Palestinian literature produced in Arabic in general, and its English-language translations in particular. On the other hand, this research concurs with the opinions of researchers that consider literature in general vital in defending some people's rights (Al-Nasir, 2003; Mahboub, 2018; Al-Bakri, 2015; Risdiant, 2011; Ade and Okunoye, 2008; Naeem, 2010). It also goes hand in hand with the idea that rich Palestinian literary production does contribute to the formulating of Palestinian identity, and to the happenings that take place in the Arab World (Parmenter, 1994; Malhas, 1970; Jayyusi, 1997; Molasky, 1999; Amit- Kochavi, 2000; Yahya, 2007; Tamimi& Battat, 2010; Saleh, 2013; Abu-Manneh, 2014; Schwalm, 2014; Handel, 2015). Furthermore, this project and other scholars praise the effectiveness and performance of translations in rendering one society's dreams, aspirations, wishes, concerns and problems to the other nations (Chesterman, 1998; House, 2001; Bassnet & Trivedi, 2002; Robinson, 2003; Lefevere, 2003; Darwish, 2010; Sayaheen, 2015; Ramadan, 2016; Alhirthani, 2017), to name but a few. Besides, this study conforms to previous studies stating that the English-language translation of Palestinian authors drew the international attention to the seventy-year life of homelessness, exile, deportation, killing, embargo (see Elmani, 2011; Jayyusi, 2007; Alhirthani, 2017; Farag, 2018).

The reality is more complex, the works mentioned succinctly above did not describe the situation accurately, but fallaciously. This research undoubtedly corresponds mostly with what has been mentioned in works above, but it also accentuates that the overall image of Palestinian literature in Arabic and its English counterpart was incomplete. In details, the researcher surveyed sources on statistical analyses of Palestinian literature in Arabic in detail, taking in the works of Elmessiri, 1996; Faour, 2001; Jarrar, 2009; Tayeh, 2010; Anabtawi, 2015; Ismail, 2017; Ruwaylī, 2018, and others. Their academic literary efforts showed uncertain and inaccurate data on some of the literary works, including only novels and short story collection that were produced on the heels of 1948 Catastrophe. This puts the researcher in an ambivalent situation.

Moreover, this large-scale pioneering project promulgates that no study has been set out to find out the numbers of Palestinian authors in English-language translation, despite the great variety of studies that commend the significance of the conveyance of such literature into other languages. As a result, it mainly casts light on one of the problems pertinent to the impeded or subdued growth of Palestinian literature in English presentations. In fact, the absence of an easily accessible database of Palestinian authors in English slowed down Palestinian literature to appear on the international literary arena. It might further have disheartened bilingual by preventing them from doing further works for the sake of the Palestinian cause embedded in literature. The idea of this project emerged as a response to a variety of research papers, including Goldberg, 1988; Khayal, 1998; Jacquemond, 2009; West-Pavlov & Volland, 2010; Büchler & Guthrie, 2011; Alhirthani, 2017, and others appreciating the building up of databases that retain significant data on translating different literatures into different languages.

Palestinian literary fiction and nonfiction are socio-political icons of Palestinians inside and outside of Palestine. Although studies were made that consensually described the value of Palestinian literary works, they lacked precise statistical investigations to know the number of volumes produced since 1948 in Arabic. It has also been poorly scrutinized to get a full picture of its overall position in English versions. As a result, this study has some purposes that would serve Palestinian literature and its English-language translation alike.

1.4 Purposes of the study

As we have seen, there are two principal problems obstructing the evolution of Palestinian literature abroad. The first one is the shortage of statistics concerning Arabic-Palestinian literature. The second one is the absence of a fully detailed database of Palestinian literati in English translations. Correspondingly, this study intends to:

1. Conduct a statistical study that covers the Arabic-Palestinian literary works written in the last seven decades.
2. Build up a thorough, digitalized and updated database of translations of Palestinian literary works into English after 1948.
3. Get an entire view of the trends and patterns on English-language translations of Palestinian literature, focusing on the categories of the texts translated into English, in addition to the authors, the translators, years of translation and publishing, the publishers and the number of editions.
4. Make the gathered information available for the publishers, translators and policy makers, so they could take actions that would buttress translation institutions and publishing houses within and without the Palestinian territories and encourage translators to redouble their efforts to produce translations of Palestinian literature, and make this information visible for more readers. Thus, English translations of Palestinian literature could be translated into a political change.

1.5 Questions of the study

This study looks forward to answering the following questions: 1) How do Palestinian literature and its English-language translations advocate for the Palestinian situation after the Catastrophe of 1948? Focusing primarily on who writes, when, who publishes, who translates and when, which country publishes and how many editions have been published in English 2) How do the translated Palestinian works in their forms and trends vary over the process of time; from 1948 till now? This would be analysed by Distant Reading; as it is objective, takes thousands of pieces of literature, and feeds them into a computer for analysis 3) What is the percentage of Palestinian works that have been translated into English language over the course of the last seven decades?

1.6 Significance of the study

The articulation of the contributions of my study could have been difficult without pointing out the research problems firstly. Referring to section (1.2), I can thus set out the significance of this study and argue for its being worthwhile.

The present doctoral dissertation will be for the benefit of Palestinian society, Palestinian identity, and the Palestinian literary masterpieces. Furthermore, the findings this research arrives at serve Palestinian literature in general as well as its English-language translation in particular, as both of them have not been studied with statistical methods for over half a century. Moreover, the research's results will be a cynosure of cultural and educational institutions that look forward to doing further research on Palestinian literary production. Other individuals can benefit from this research by doing more studies in comparative literature field of study.

This project will be instrumental in the inauguration of a novel and particular domain of study at other universities as well. This new area of study might be named Palestinian literature in English-language translation. Additionally, the digital database attached to this research is considered one body that comprises data on the Palestinian literary works in English-language translation. The digital database might be of interest to others to make further efforts to edit books like mine, which is titled Handala, Show us your face! (2019). It consists of some newly translated, but unpublished Palestinian poems. The potential work will in one way or another contribute to the closing of some translational gaps existing on the digital database to get a full picture of the English translations of Palestinian literature. This Palestinian literary database will be easily accessible and easily editable.

1.7 Outline of the study

This subsection gives an overview of the structure adopted in this thesis, considering it relevant to the fluidity of the reviewer's understanding of the upcoming work. This research is composed of six main chapters, the introduction, which is the first chapter of this research, relevance chapter is the second one, the third chapter is translation background, the fourth chapter is centralized digital online databases, the fifth chapter of discussion and data analysis, and the conclusions chapter, which is sixth and last.

The chapter of relevance sheds light on three main topics, including advocacy for the Palestinian situation in general, world literature as advocacy, and modern Arab literature from Palestine. The first part of chapter one is introductory. It presents an overall description of the situation of Palestinians in Palestine and in exile after the year of 1948. It mentions also some of the devices, actions, procedures, books, articles that serve the seventy-year cause. The second part shows the contributions of the world literature to the upholding of the vulnerable and disadvantaged people worldwide. The third part of this chapter focuses more on the great role, which Palestinian literature plays for the sake of Palestinians and their question.

The chapter on translation background highlights the topics pertinent to the great influences of translation on national and international issues through five main parts, including translation as definition and adverse effects, translation as advocacy, translation of Arabic literature into English, and translation of Palestinian literature into English. The first subchapter presents brief general definitions of translation and shines light on some dire consequences of mistranslation. The second part of this chapter defines translation and throws light on arguments on the capacity of translation to gain the required supports to people experiencing all forms of iniquity and discrimination. The third part of this chapter focuses on translations from and into Arabic for thousands of years until nowadays. It also discusses the main periods and watersheds of English-language translation of Arabic literature. This study explores the principal reasons that led to the slow growth of Arabic literature in English-language translation. The fourth part consists of three topics, including growing translations, why interest in Palestinian literature in English translations is increasing and why there is such a paucity of English-language translation of Palestinian narratives.

The fourth chapter concerns centralized national translation online resources. It is built of four subchapters that briefly address the most common translation databases of miscellaneous literary works in different countries. The first part of this subchapter shows briefly some research papers on the reconceptualization of literary texts via applying a new analytic method; Distant Reading from individual textual analysis into systematic analysis. The second subunit touches directly upon a variety of translation catalogues, so it could simplify the perception of building up the digital catalogue and confirm the roles these databases play for benefit of some nations. The third component of this subchapter concerns extant resources of Palestinian literature in translations. It puts a spotlight in previous Palestinian catalogues that included only a number of works translated into Arabic by Palestinian translators. It also observes that no database on Palestinian literary production in English has been previously constructed. The fourth subchapter includes photos taken mainly from my digital archive. They would be for the benefit of the reader who wants to gain an access to my digital effort.

The fifth chapter casts light more on the statistical results this research extracted. It is supported by some figures and tables that recapitulate and eyeball the reality of Palestinian literature in English-language translation in the last seven decades. These figures also help the reader develop a complete image of all the datasets existent in the digital catalogue.

The sixth chapter of this thesis is the conclusion. It summarises recent findings regarding Palestinian literature in English translation. It also discusses the study's limiting factors. It then highlights the implications; findings that fail to support or partially support the research questions and significance. Further, this chapter ends up with recommendations to serve and promote Palestinian literature and translations alike.

1.8 Methodology

First and foremost, this project aims to map the state of translations of the Palestinian literary works in English, in English-speaking or non-English-speaking countries. It is rooted in the field of Postcolonial and Global South studies at the University of Tübingen, in the south west of Germany. The postcolonial scope of the project means that this study must be confined to the period at the end of the British mandate in 1947 and at the start of the current Israeli occupation of the pre-1948 Palestinian territory. This project is based to some extent on publications by local and international publishing houses and websites run by glocalization groups. It would be advantageous to expand this study in the future to cover all Arabic titles in English translations in order to obtain an entire picture of literary translations from Arabic into English. This study focuses mainly on translations in English, as it the cynosure of most of the people in the world.

The current project is mostly a part of quantitative approach and has established a conventional model to work with. This model comprises variable elements that have aided the completion of the study's objectives. These elements consist of location, materials and sources, targeted sample, statistical treatment and techniques for data analysis.

Through a statistical approach, this study covers the general number of Palestinian literary works produced in Arabic since 1948 until now. In addition, it scrutinizes the entire background which English-language translation of Arabic-Palestinian literature has taken place over the last seventy years. The statistical survey relies not only on Palestinian literature published in English translation, but also on sources that still influence the Palestinian literary scene. These include different literary events and festivals, social media reception of translated literature, financial support provided to the publishing or translation consortia by different sources as well as the policies imposed on the arts bodies and other unpublished translated literary

Due to the displacement that Palestinians in general have experienced in different times over the last seven decades, Palestinian literature in general and its English-language translation in particular, were not limited by a certain region. The statistical study on Palestinian literary works and its English-language translation was impossible to be conducted in one place. For instance, in Palestine it was difficult to get an access to those writers who live in some areas or to those cultural institutions that exist in the areas beyond the Green Line; the 1948 Palestinian Occupied Land. Furthermore, the Palestinian diaspora has found its way to some of the more remote corners of the earth. Consequently, other strategies and methods had to be used, as the following paragraph shows.

The gathered data comes mainly from different websites, like Worldcat, Amazon, Poem Hunter, Free Verse, Fayeq Oweis, allpoetry, and books, such as A Land of Stone and Thyme (1996) by Nur Elmessiri and Abdelwahab Elmessiri, Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature (1992) edited by Salma Khadra Jayyusi, World Healing, World Peace Poetry (2018) by William S. Peters, Palestine: a conscious poetic offering (2018) and Contemporary Jordanian Poets (2013) by Nizar Sartawi, Wounded Birds Feature Stories (2013) translated by Izzat Ghazzawi, Modern Palestinian Short Stories in Translation (1998) edited by Izzat Ghazzawi and Claire Peak, Stories from Palestine (2003) by Said Abdelwahed, The Year of the Poet (2016, 2017, 2018) by The Poetry Posse, My Shadow (2017) by Nizar Sartawi, The Gateway to Modern Arabic Poetry (2007) by Munir Mezyed and Abdul-Settar Assady, Literary Translation from Arabic into English in The United Kingdom and Ireland, 1990-2010 (report) by Alexndra Büchler and Alice Guthrie and online magazines such as Banipal, Poetry Magazine, Alfikre Magazine, and others. Social media, like Facebook, WhatsApp, Imo in addition to phone calls and personal interviews, arts festivals, venues and culture bodies contributed greatly to the obtaining of the required information.

The subjects of this study are writers and scholars who started to write to describe the political events and the social problems that affected Palestine after 1948. Out of the idea that literature, whether political, social, romantic, historical, satirical, etc. presents a certain nation to the world, their fiction and nonfiction regarding the Palestinian issue in Arabic has been counted in an statistical section. The second field of study is that of the translators of the original texts. They provided me their translational works that are included in this project's digital catalogue.

An extra empirical repository of English Palestinian titles is going to be available online for whoever interested in Palestinian-English translation literature. The repository contains the same information as the excel database does but offers greater ease of use than the excel one. This digital database has data on the original title, including the name and birth date of the author, literary type of the title, the year of publication, and the name of the publishing house. It also provides the searcher with information about the English title of the original work, the translator, the year of translation and publishing, in addition to the country that published the English title. The digital database of Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019 was constructed in cooperation with the Computer Science Centre at the University of Tübingen-Germany in 2017/2018.

Chapter 2: Relevance

The present division of the study casts light on different rubrics that lead to further subsections. It covers topics that have to do with the question of Palestinian in national and international forums, and at all levels. It also highlights the role of world literature in advocating for persecuted peoples. It throws further light on the role of Palestinian literature in defending Palestinian identity. This chapter covers the number of Palestinian literary works in the categories of novels, short story collections, anthologies of poetry, plays, autobiographies, biographies, testimonials, prose texts from 1948 until now. Based on the notions that Palestinian literature in all its forms consolidates Palestinian identity, and that the words from Palestine craft the Palestinian nation (see Saleh, 2013), this chapter sheds light not only on patriotic literary works, but also on those works that encompass romantic and social tenors as they one way or another touch upon Palestine.

2.1 Advocacy for the Palestinian situation

Advocacy for the over seventy-year-old Palestinian question is not only presented by conferences, revolutions and peaceful demonstrations but also through the writings of literary masterpieces that have been undertaken by national and international literati, film directors, policy makers and writers since the Nakba, when about 700,000 Palestinian citizens lost their lands in the year 1948, up to the present day. Such writers and scholars stand shoulder to shoulder with the political issue in Palestine via their literary works. The endeavours of those scholars have defended Palestine through different literary genres such as poetry, drama and prose in Palestine, in the Arab countries and in the whole world. Since the advent of 1948, which forms an influential watershed in the lives of Palestinians, Palestinian and non-Palestinian authors have expressed their disapproval of Israeli repressive measures and of the attempts that culminated in the annexation of Jerusalem, the establishment of the Israeli state, the expulsion of more than 700,000 Palestinians from historical Palestine to the corners of the earth, the demolition of houses, mass killing of innocent women and elderly men, causing untold misery to a multitude of families, the detaining of army-age men, and physical punishment of male and female Palestinian detainees and the wholesale destruction of urban neighborhoods (see Hawash, 2015; Darraj, 2006; Anabtawi, 2015; Abu-Manneh, 2014; Barbato, 2014; Cueto, 2014).

In the last decade, not few national and international scholars, writers and columnists have thematized the predicament of the Gaza Strip. This territory, which in fact has become one of the world's most enormous prisons where more than one and a half million people are still living in an area of 360 km². Due to the political situation in Gaza, part of the Palestinian territories, about half of the Gaza Strip turned into a no-go zone. Roberts (2010, para.2-6) comments, “according to the United Nations, in a statement quoted by the BBC 43% of Gaza had been declared a no go area. The question is where are the people to go to in order to escape Israeli attacks? The UN relief agency UNRWA said more than 118,300 Palestinians had now taken refuge in its shelters. It said 43% of Gaza had been affected by evacuation warnings or declared no-go zones.”

Loosely speaking, there are three specific groups of intellectuals who contributed to the support of Palestinians in the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and in the diaspora via literary corpora. The first literary collection was written by Palestinian figures based in and out of Palestine. This group includes Palestinian scholars who wrote in English; they are considered Palestinian international authors, like Edward Said, Fawaz Turki, Rashid Khalidi, Ismail Khalidi, Yasir Suleiman, Yezid Sayigh, Susan Abulhawa, Suheir Hammad, Jabra Ibrahim Jabra, Salma Khadra Jayyusi, Ibrahim Fawal, Rula Jebreal, Selma Dabbagh, Ghada Karmi, Hala Alyan, Aziz Shihab, Abd al-Jabbār ‘Adwān, Naomi Shihab Nye, Karl Sabbagh, Ali Abunimah, Chaker Khazaal and others. On the other hand, this group includes the scholars, poets, storytellers, novelists who write literature in Arabic, including Mahmoud Darwish, Samīh al-Qāsim, Sahar Khalifeh, Emile Habiby, Ibrahim Nasrallah, Yahya Yakhliif, Ghasan Zaqtan, Fadwa Tuqan, Fayṣal Ḥūrānī, Ghassan Kanafani, Tawfiq Sayigh, Wisam al Rafydy, Izzat Ghazzawi and Laila al-Atrash, to name just a few.

The second group encompasses the contributions to the Palestinian cause of scholars from many Arab-speaking countries. They write against the inhumane actions that take place in Palestine. In their homelands, these Arab writers see closely the hard lives of millions of Palestinian refugees. Writers from different Arab countries adopted literary productions on the behalf of the Palestinian people. For this group of writers, Farag (2017, XII) says, “the question of Palestine plays a role in Arab politics, it represents a trauma in collective memory that it has been the focus of prolific artistic and literary energy, a drive that goes beyond Palestinians to include minds and talents from Arabic-speaking countries.” The literary contributions of the second group of Arab scholars that substantially underpin the Palestinian case are made via novels, short stories, poems and other literary forms. The most well-known Arab scholars in this field are Elias Khoury and Fu’ād Ḥaddād from Lebanon, Abd al-Majīd al-Ḥājj Qāsim from Tunisia, Bahaa Taher and Muḥammad Salmāwī from Egypt, Ahlam Mostaghanmi from Algeria, Hasan Faleh, ‘Īsā Nā‘ūrī, Hisham al-Bustani, Heba Ali and Aḥmad Saalim Raḥḥaal from Jordan, Tareq Al-Suwaidan from Kuwait, Constantine Zuraiq and Sadiq Al-Azm's from Syria and others whose works for the sake of the Palestinian cause are mentioned in the following subsection of this chapter.

The third group comprises literary contributions by international authors from non-Arab countries. This body of scholars introduces and accentuates to the world Palestinian life in their occupied lands and in exile. This group in fact led this researcher to modify slightly Farag's aforementioned quotation, which necessarily needs to be more accurate and broader. As a result, it could be stated that the question of Palestine plays a major role in Arab and non-Arab politics, a drive that awakes the sentiments of talents in Arabic and non-Arabic speaking countries against the Israeli actions in Palestine. The international presentations of the Palestinian question are miscellaneous literary efforts, including documentaries, movies, books, testimonials, articles. On the other hand, I, the researcher, find it substantial to mention shortly in the next part of this chapter some of the most international movements, areas of support for the benefit of the Palestinian situation, and other cosmopolitan literary contributions evidence of the international literary sponsorship of the Palestinian cause.

With regard to the global literary advocacy, there is truly a clear influence on the part of the cinema, film producers and documentary organizers on the Palestinian problem. Other multifarious articles, speeches also show an overall advocacy for the Palestinian cause. The composers and speakers of such literary works never write or speak for no reason, but always have a political, ethical, or aesthetic agenda. The most prominent documentaries, films, books and articles that advocate for the Palestinian case are also mentioned in the next subchapter.

Since this section focuses on the national and worldwide contributions to the support of the Palestinian situation, it would be relevant to refer to other ways of the global backup of the Palestinian problem, which in the end causes a great wide-ranging concern. Global public opinion at present is commonly more sympathetic to the Palestinian problem. Therefore, there exist countless video footages and testimonials that prevail countless globally published articles on diverse websites like, the British daily newspaper the Guardian, Human Right Watch, Prophecy New Watch (PNW), Gatestone institute, Bustle, the Atlantic, and many others.

Besides above mentioned, supportive articles, websites, international events and movements defend Palestinians, such as the Palestinian Festival of Literature, the Free Gaza Movement, the Creation of the Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions Movement (BDS), the Free Palestine Movement (FPM), Breaking the Silence and Defense for Children International Palestine.

In short, Palestinians have nothing more than their words and the literary support of the others to defend their land and to stop the Israeli oppressive actions in the second place. Thus, many Palestinians have dedicated their lives to writing more and more literary manuscripts about the acute situation in Palestine under the ascendancy of Israeli occupation and about their expatriation in other countries. These literary participations are a typical method for publicizing the Palestinian question to a wider audience. The previous actions including killing, destruction, exportation, incarceration and blockades were and are still the dominant themes in most Palestinian literary works, whether fiction or nonfiction.

2.2 Literature as advocacy

One of the most recondite challenges any activity for sociopolitical change encounters is the question of how to grip the masses, to bring people under one banner and to create a convenient, dynamic, and counterhegemonic ideology. This study axiomatically deals with literature as one of the most effective methods to overcome the aforementioned hurdles and as a way whereby people express their opinions and show their reactions to a certain ideology. Literature, including novels, poetry, plays, short stories, biographies, autobiographies, documentaries and others, “is an aesthetic, linguistic, and eloquent structure that implicates a special vision and stands for creativity and expressive beauty and is characterized by influence and immortality” Al-Nasir (2003), Mahboub (2018), Al-Bakri (2015), Risdiant (2011), Ade and Okunoye (2008), Naeem (2016).

Even though the previous paragraph has mentioned some of the pros of literature for sociopolitical change, nonetheless, the incalculable contributions of literature could not be restricted in just some lines. For that reason, too many questions hover around the motives for producing literary fiction and literary nonfiction as well in a specific area and within a definite phase. For example, Sartre (1988, p.36) wonders, “if it is only the poet's business to contemplate words in a disinterested fashion, then one has the right to ask the prose-writer, What is your aim in writing? What undertakings are you engaged in, and why does it require you to have recourse to writing?” This research sees the mission of the poet, novelist, short story writer and other literary scholars are identical. That is to say, literature of all genres emerges to change the reality and raise the awareness of peoples. Furthermore, such questions are partially answered by Walker (2011) albeit indirectly; “genres in literature are the result of changes in the social and political spectrum; literature is a form of discourse used to reorder the social instability, and a new genre is the product of this literary discourses. Literature is often used as a way to naturalize political ideology.”

This section of the study firstly answers such relevant questions from a general historical point of view to prove that sociopolitical literature, including prose and poetry, is not newborn but inveterate and goes back not hundreds but thousands of years. Hence, it mentions real instances of the contributions literature has made for the sake of people who suffered from the misuse of political power during history. It then casts light on the roles of literature in attaining liberation and conviviality and in achieving further mutual understanding between diverse cultures and belligerent nations. This section also addresses the psychological and social functions of literature in expressing the ambitions and wishes of certain groups of people. In the last stage of this section, the research examines in detail the mission of literary fiction and nonfiction with respect to sociopolitical issues in general and the Palestinian cause in particular.

2.2.1 Hints on the empirical examples and notes of literature as advocacy

To give conclusive answers concerning the questions raised in Sartre's abovementioned quotation from a historical point of view, it is plausible to say that literature, including fiction and nonfiction contributed to the resistance of the political tyranny, the creation of sociopolitical awareness, raising of the collective consciousness of subaltern people and the achievement of political goals. For instance, ancient Greek literature described the political developments that took a place within the era of Greek sociopolitical turmoil. The Iliad, an ancient Greek epic poem in dactylic hexameter, including its sequel the Odyssey is attributed to the legendary author Homer. It depicted the course of the battle of Troy in the 12th century B.C. through which a lot of menfolk and women and children were killed and more males and females were taken as slaves. Baricco, an Italian writer and journalist, pronounced that the epic poem the Iliad was the other beautiful face of the war of peace; he insisted on the significance to reread this epic in the current period as it is manifestly inundated with conflicts, wars and anxieties. Furthermore, the fairytales Calila e Dimna were employed in the 4th and 8th century against sociopolitical despotism in India and Iraq.

Similarly but recently; within the first ten years of the 20th century, the Latin American literary genre testimonial narratives emerged as a rebuttal to the dominant classes in Latin America that tended via literature to naturalize the difference as it is seen from their cultural and social perspectives. "Testimonial literature is an authentic narrative, told by a witness who is moved to narrate by the urgency of a war, oppression, revolution. Emphasizing popular oral discourse, the witness portrays his or her experience as a representative of a collective memory and identity" (Walker, 2011). In the same area, Beverly and Zimmerman (1990, p.xi) confirm, "...the testimonio (testimonial narratives) which has become the most influential narrative form associated with the Central American revolution."

Furthermore, the contribution of literature recalls the 1941 song Le Chant des Partisan. This chant mostly is a part of political poetry, which was originally written in Russian language. Le Chant was translated into French. Due to theme of resistance, it was later sung as the unofficial national anthem of France by the Russian-born, French singer-songwriter Anna Marly in 1942. Debreczeny (1997, p.4) asserts, "the researcher Raskin concludes that [this] song strengthened social cohesion among diverse groups, allayed anxieties, and promoted confidence".

With respect to Resistance literature, in her article about Harlow's book Resistance Literature, Fekete (1988) adds, "Harlow asserts that literature, no less than the armed struggle, is vital to the attempt to wrest back the cultural history expropriated by the forces of colonialism and imperialism." In the same course, Hurt (1987, para.2) comments, "Amilcar Cabral summarizes resistance literature's primary role when he explains [that] armed liberation struggle is not only a product of culture, but a determinant of culture... but only via literary elements will they [resistance movements] be able to liberate themselves from cultural hegemony and domination." Harlow juxtaposed the Latin American literary case to the Palestinian literary case to show the role literatures and literary scholars would have played in the achievement of freedom and peace, unless they had been obliterated and murdered.

Amongst the many institutions maintaining Palestinian cultural identity destroyed by the Israeli Defense Forces was the PLO Research Centre in Beirut-the archival centre for the documentary and cultural history of the Palestinian people. Victor Jara, revolutionary poet, composer and singer, murdered during the September 1973 coup in Chile, the overthrow Allende spoke of another form of invasion, the cultural invasion which ‘like a leafy tree ... prevents us from seeing our own sun, sky and stars ... in order to see the sky above our heads, our task is to cut this tree at the roots (Harlow 1987, p.234).

In Palestine, during the 1936 revolution against the British colonization, literature and the political revolutionary happenings affected each other reciprocally. Literature called the Palestinian people to fight and defend their lands and the revolution influenced the literature with new updated themes. On that, Abu-Manneh (2016, p.18) affirms, “the revolt 1936 was also a turning point in Palestinian literature. Ghassan Kanafani’s second emphasis is mass revolt and the production of what he calls a ‘popular culture’ against imperialism, Zionist colonialism, and Arab elite complicity and reaction.” In the same context, but three decades after the 1936 rebellion, Kanafani innovated Palestinian resistance literature, which was for him as important as armed resistance as this type of literature endured the hard circumstances between 1948 and 1967. Palestinian Resistance Literature called the people to engage in revolutionary uprisings opposing oppression, encouraged people to preserve social integrity, which is an image of resistance as well. In the occupied land of Palestine, “Resistance Literature became a blogger of mass resistance and made renewable fuel out of its setbacks and torments” (Kanafani 1968, p.43_66) (my translation from Arabic). On that, Abu-Manneh (2016, p.75) adds, “Palestinian Resistance Literature is thus both a historical explanation of literary form and advocacy.” In all cases, Palestinian literature generally, and Resistance Literature particularly share the common purpose of defending Palestine and ending the misery of a large number of Palestinians in and out of Palestine. Hence, history is the best evidence of the missions that some literary works have had. They unified people towards a common aim, helped to eradicate injustice and to achieve sociopolitical equity.

2.2.2 Hints on the contributions of literature in the achieving of liberation and expressing of national ambitions

Mostly, literature in all its forms as earlier mentioned defends and fights for the aims of a certain society. The national ambitions and dreams of a specific people are included in literary works. Literature, romantic or resistant, builds up some nation-ness. For instance, when somebody reads a romantic novel or poem by a Palestinian writer, this novel or poem one way or another reminds the reader of Palestine. What makes literature special is that it keeps up with events, depicts the developments, and tries to play a leading role in steering them towards liberation struggles. In this regard, Abu-Manneh (2016, p.6) discusses, “when we are contemporaries of the heroic liberation struggles of the Chinese, Indian, etc., people, all these developments flow concretely into the common historical stream of the liberation of mankind and are therefore portrayable in literature.” Literature furthers the mutual understanding between different peoples. Thus, for this research, “there is no better way than literature to reflect both private and public life and nothing is more efficient than literature to reach mutual understanding between nations” (Amit-Kochavi 2000, p.68). On the role of literature in getting reciprocal understanding, Mez’el (2014) comments, “the Israeli Ehud Ben-Ezer feels compassionate towards the characters in the novel of Men in the Sun [(1999) by Ghassan Kanafani] in English translation, and that if the Israeli politicians read the novel Death in Beirut [(1984) by Tawfig Awwad in English translation], they would not attack Beirut” (my translation from Arabic).

Literature is in fact the temporal existence. That is to say, it reiterates the past to understand the present, so we see the future. In other words, “literature can be a powerful catalyst for releasing memories that have lain dormant, thereby confronting us with, in Paul Fussell’s words our own buried lives; a lens that depicts the relation between the human and the existence” (Molasky, 1999; Abu Khattab, 2005; Al-Nasir, 2003).

Literature, especially literary fiction, is heartfelt. Literature adopting imaginary characters, place, time and events normally brings to the attention of the reader. Hallas (2010, n.p.) affirms, “literature is the only effective mean which is capable to reach the hearts of the people, and to encourage them to act and work through the ideas, principles and visions that the writer promotes for” (my translation from Arabic). Literature has an efficacy of calling different platoons to muster, pluck up courage, strengthen social fabric in order to, under certain political conditions, protect their homeland from other external interventions as in Le Chant. Literature also plays an important role in the liberation of people who are subject to external governance. Therein, the absence of realistic literature in overly controlled lands might delay their sovereignty and retard their political unity. Beverley and Zimmerman (1990, p. 10) affirm, “Gramsci argues that the absence of Italian popular realistic literature, like the sterilized novel in France or Britain or the Work of Tolstoy in Russia, was a factor in the political disunity of Italy, and the partial failure of the democratic Risorgimento in the nineteenth century.”

From other perspectives, literature plays worthwhile roles on different psychological and social levels. The writer who is representative of his or her people tends to express his deep and suppressed sentiments and emotions to the other societies, in order to let them conceive the current case they are subject to. On a social level, the scholar expresses his or her society’s hopes, dreams and aspirations, which would boost the morale of the people, and urge them to work harder to achieve these aspirations. On an external level, the writer portrays his or her society through mentioning its merits and demerits. Thus, it would be a good chance to the society to ameliorate the merits, and to get rid of such inferior demerits. As a result, the role and the responsibility of the readers in literary materials are greater than the writer’s; the task of the reader is to do what the text asks him or her to, and to react correctly to the tenor, whether it is informative or entertaining. As long as the literature raises the reader's awareness on miscellaneous levels, his or her realization of social, political, and cultural problems rises.

2.2.3 Literary fiction and nonfiction in advocating for disadvantaged and vulnerable peoples

This subdivision of the study, with reference to the creation of literary works, sheds light on the functions of literary fiction and literary nonfiction. It is a truism that literature is an international form that leads to the expression of sentiments, the stating of the ideas and thoughts and the articulation of the pains, wishes and dreams of peoples. What matters more here is the understanding of the contributions of literature to the cementing of the sociopolitical ideologies.

2.2.3.1 Literary fiction

Literary fiction presents facts and realities of certain societies. The reader sometimes feels a lie in what he or she reads, nonetheless, literary fiction is anyhow a distinguished and magnetizing style of writing that grabs the readers to go through the text and discover more realities. Literary fiction does not only aim to entertain the reader, it also seeks to educate him or her, defend a particular case, and raises the reader's awareness of certain issues pertinent to the social and political life. On that topic, Abu-Manneh (2016, p.5-6) confirms, "as early as 1930s, when the colonial world was just beginning to awaken politically.....the conjunction of revolutionary-democratic humanism and popular mobilization lies at the base of Lukac's model in The Historical Novel..." Luckas model means to locate the character's identity in fictional realm, rather than in the real or authentic mode of discourse. Literary fiction includes:

A- Al-riwaya (The novel)

Al-riwaya, in Arabic the novel, is a relatively long narrative of literary fiction whereby the reader sees imaginary characters, narratives, places and other unreal elements. Correspondingly, for a variety of critics, non-fictional novels outdo fictional novels. Qukula (2016) confirms, "many often perceive fiction novels to be inferior to non-fiction." However, if the reader goes behind the surface meaning of the novel, he or she can grasp that reality is the mirror of the hypothetical account of events, like the utopian and dystopian novels that mainly tackle social and political structures. At the same time, they include content for liberty and equality. On that, Qukula (2016) comments, "Sidley says dystopian novels explore economic and political structures and social scourges."

In recent history, various novels represent to the world the lives of people who are still experiencing harsh sociopolitical conditions. Thence, the Palestinian novel, as an example, was affected by social realism due to the political Palestinian circumstances. It also played a pivotal role to protect the national heritage and traditions and to instill the respect of national values (see Yahia, 2007; Tamimi and Battat, 2010) (my translation from Arabic). Not only Palestinian scholars further the Palestinian cause through their Arabic novels, but other international and non-Palestinians authors also show their readiness to support the Palestinian attitude via their novels. The most well-known novels in this field are Wandering Star (1992) by the French novelist Jean-Marie Gustave Le Clézio, through which he advocates for the rights of repatriation for the Palestinian refugees who fled from Palestine because of the Israeli actions. In addition to other Palestinian-American novels that employ imaginary characters and events to portray the forlorn life of Palestinians in and out of Palestine, like the Mornings in Jenin (2011) by Suzan Abulhwa, Salt Houses (2017) by Hala Alyian and others. Furthermore, the tragic situation in Palestine stirred the conscience of many scholars, who stood ready to describe to their world the status quo in Palestine. For instance, Ethel Edith Mannin wrote the novel The Road to Beersheba (1963). This novel was translated later into Arabic by the Egyptian translator and storyteller Nazmi Luqa. Mannin tried, via her novelistic work, to show the world the tough life which Palestinians live.

Likewise, novelists from the Arab World were in a position to support the Palestinian liberation through their novels. Ali (2011, para.8) says, “the critic Fakhri Saleh clarifies that the Arabic novel interacted with the great historical events that were going on in the Arab World after the defeat of 1967.” For more details, the translated novel Memory in the Flesh (1993) by the Algerian Ahlam Mostaghanmi contributes to the Palestinian situation via throwing light on a Palestinian revolutionary character that appears in some scene of her novel. Further, the translated novel Love in Exile (2001) by the Egyptian scholar Bahaa Taher’s tackles with the massacre of Palestinians at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps in Lebanon in 1982. Moreover, the Arabic novel Al-Kharaz Al Mulawan (Colourful Beads) (1999) by the Egyptian novelist Muḥammad Salmāwī depicts the reality of the Palestinian woman under occupation. Additionally, the Arabic novel Qāmāt al-zabad (Statures of Foams) in 1987 by the Jordanian novelist Ilyās Farkūḥ gives an overall image of El-Buss refugee camp near the City of Tire in Lebanon. In addition, the Arabic novel Bahth ‘an Hawiyeh (In Search for Identity) (1982) by the Syrian novelist Mohammad Zahra describes the tough circumstances in the Palestinian refugee camps. The translated novel Anta Anta mundhu al-yawm (1968) You as of Today my Homeland Stories of War, Self, and Love and the Arabic novel Awraq ‘Aqer (Sterile Leaves) in 1968 by the Jordanian novelists Taysīr Sabūl’s and Sālim Naḥḥās respectively talk about the 1967 Naksa which refers to the displacement of the Palestinian people that accompanied Israel’s victory in the 1967 Six-Day War. Other novels translated into English, like Gate of the Sun (1998), White Masks (1981) and Yalo (2002) by the Lebanese novelist Elias Khoury depict the life of Palestinians in Exile. The Arabic novel ‘Awdat al-ṭā’ir ilā al-baḥr (The Return of the Bird to the Sea) in 2000 by the Syrian novelist Halim Isber Barakat sheds light on the Naksa. Besides, other Arabic novels by Arab novelists show some issues relevant to the Palestinian cause, including Abdel Rahman Munif, Yūsuf Qu‘ayd, Ṣalāḥ Chāhīn and others.

Based on the principle “you know best what is best for you” the Palestinian scholars themselves have the greatest lot of such literary contributions. Therefore, the section (2.3), titled Modern Arab-literature from Palestine mentions the most prominent Palestinian novelists and their novels that deal with the Palestinian political theme and the beleaguered life of Palestinians since 1948 until now.

B- Al-qissa al-qasira (The short story)

Al-qissa in Arabic, the short story in English is a piece of prose fiction that has become preferable due to its reasonable length, concision and precision, as it can be read in one sitting. In other words, the notion of this research devolves on the sense that Palestinian literature in particular finds it difficult to sustain longer narrative works of fiction, for political and historical reasons. The short story emerged undoubtedly as a response to the developments that required a form of literary nonfiction capable to go up with the temporal dynamics on the Palestinian arena, and political ubiquitous stranglehold. In this respect, I tap into Nikro’s Temporalities review which (2013, p.3) says, “the very dynamic of existence, the pulsating drive of the unceasing transformation of being itself”. Further, another aspect of this fictional form’s peculiarity is the encompassing of words and sentences that are of productivity of current time. On that, Petite (2015, n.p.) “short stories bring more pressure, because like poets, each paragraph, sentence, and word is more important than they would be inside a large novel.”

On the other hand, like in novels, the implied real meaning that the short story carries and tries to transmit to the reader lies beyond the imaginary narration of events. The short story is actually a significant advocate for a definite sociopolitical issue. The advent of any literary form in a certain area within a period coincides with the occurrence of a novel sociopolitical watershed. For example, “the real Moroccan short story coincides with the birth of nationalism and anti-colonial resistance” (Frag 2017, n.p.). Similarly, within the recent history, due to the sociopolitical problems which have been developing in the Palestinian territories for more than half a century, the short story sets forth the best examples for the depiction of the circumstances of Palestinians whether in or out of Palestine. Frag (2017, n.p.) adds, “over the course of this nearly half-century period, the Palestinian short story rose to great prominence and exhibited a remarkable ability to respond and adapt to the upheavals....” In addition, feminism is also a substantial theme that short stories usually cover. In this area, Shihab (2005, p.314) affirms that, “the researcher has focused on studying the image of the troubled and suppressed woman in the Arab World in general and in Palestine in particular. Contrary to what the researcher expected from Azzam's stories, and unlike other stories by Azzam where she concentrated on the events and pains of Palestine, in these collections, Azzam did not focus on these events and pains.”

Correspondingly, when we, as readers, go through the short stories written by Palestinian storytellers or by supportive Arab writers to the Palestinian question, we perceive that the message behind the fiction is to advocate for the people who have endured a life of misery.

In 2015, Petite talked about the little interest in the writing of the short story in the present day. Notwithstanding, for many critics, the short story is still a respectable method of expressing the concerns of the writers, who are representatives of the whole people, and reflecting the reality of the history of any land. Regarding the Palestinian short story, Glanville (2012, n.p.) comments, “I wanted to include stories by some of the most distinguished Palestinian writers... it was important to look for writers in Palestine and in the diaspora too. Since the creation of Israel in 1948, displacement has been the advent of modern Palestinian life, and I wanted the spread of writers to reflect that reality.”

What distinguishes the (Palestinian) short story is the adoption of non-linear narrative technique mostly. That is to say, stories are out of the chronological order of narration and the causal pattern of events. In his book Gaza Writes Back, Refaat Alareer (2013, p.13) adds, “stories and narratives, part of every human gathering, enable people to make sense of their past and relate it to their present, they can be the main thread attaching to them to their past, and they can present the form of a dream yet to be fulfilled.”

In addition to the Palestinian short story writers, writers from different countries tend to the writing of single short stories that are in the interest of the Palestinian cause, like The death of the Palestinian boy (2010) in English by the first time Emirati writer Nolli Bin Ali, Written on the Palm of Her Hand (n.d.) by the Jordanian writer Hasan Faleh, Hymn of Life (n.d.) by the Jordanian storyteller Heba Ali, Crossing (2010) in Arabic and Gaza (2010) in Arabic by the Jordanian writer Hisham al-Bustani and others. They actually sponsor Palestine and advocate for the Palestinian ethos via the depictions of their miserable lives inside and outside Palestine. By contrast, this research could not find any international short story outside the scope of Arabic writings to describe the Palestinian situation.

C- Al-shier (Poetry)

Al-shier in Arabic, poetry in English is a form of literary fiction that adopts aesthetic and rhythmic qualities of language to evoke meaning in addition to prosaic ostensible meaning. With regard to the significance of poetry on the political level, the verso of the 1993 book What Is Found There by Adrienne Rich accentuates that the constant wrestling between poetry and politics is equivalent to the fierce and endless conflict that sprung between Jacob and the angel. In other words, poetry plays a discernable role in defending people who are under political domination. It also encourages them to rebel against it. Poetry also beseeches people to love their homeland and to resist all forms of ethnic inequality, exactly as in Palestinian resistance poetry, which Ghassan Kanafani talked about. Poetry, as an imaginary type of literature, has a noble and sublime significance beyond its unordinary language and allegories. “The language of poetry naturally falls in with the language of power, [imagination] seeks the quantity of excitement by inequality and disproportion, [the understanding] seeks the quantity of good by justice and proportion” (Norbrook 2002, p.4-5).

Temporality in poetry makes it excessively used. Similarly to short story, poetry describes the existence in imminent time. For example, if we go back to Mahmoud Darwish’s manuscript Memory for Forgetfulness in 1995 in English translation, we can easily notice that Mahmoud Darwish wrote it during the Lebanese war in 1982, and amid the sounds of canons and the scents of firearms. Henceforth, poetry or Al-shier tells us unequivocally the events as they occurred.

The role of any poet is neither lesser than the role of any patriot or honorable politician, who defends as much as he or she can the right of his or her aggrieved indigenous people, nor less than the role of a fighter, who is in complete readiness and willingness to fight the power for right as well. “The rhetorician George Puttenham declared that poets had been the first lawgivers and the first politicians, in addition, Whigs had seen the great poets as prophets of social and religious reform” (Norbrook 2002, p.1-3). In the same context, Kanafani (1968, p.68) adds, “it is not possible for any Arab event to pass without recording in resistance poetry. The Tripartite Aggression, the Algerian Revolution and [other serious happenings] are a turning point in the history of this poetry. In this range, the Arab social allegiances seem organically mingled” (my translation from Arabic). Norbrook’s and Kanafani’s quotations are an outright evidence of the contribution of poetry to social reforms and the commendable and significant influence they leave for the sociopolitical practice besides. With regard to poetry for the new generation, it is seen as a means of overcoming despondency and sociopolitical anarchy. Rich (1993, n.p.) comments, “Scully’s book Line Break: Poetry as Social Practice, is one I wish I could put it in the hands of every young poet, and many of contemporaries, for its acuity and passion, gravitas and anger-honed wit..., no doubt that poetry can change young lives through giving words and form to chaos and desperation.” In the same context, “poets are even given a spiritual function as noticed by Ali Jimale Ahmed: poetry has become associated with almost divine powers so that poets are accorded a status equivalent to that given to wadads (religious men)” (Iye 2014, para.17).

By contrast, Rich raises briefly the common idea that poetry is futile and failing; “poetry is powerless, or that it can have nothing to do with the kinds of powers that organize us as a society” (Rich 1993, n.p.). Based on the current Palestinian sociopolitical situation, Palestinian poetry is fruitful, and has a lot to do for the sake of the indigenous inhabitants, like the raising of their awareness, orienting them towards a common and sublime aspiration, intensifying efforts to achieve liberation, the unifying of the people on the idea of the retrieval of their stolen rights and showing the veritable reality to the world, Taha (2012, p.3) concludes the tasks of poetry and says, “the poem is a window that overlooks history and the real world, it is the outcome of spiritual, psychological and historical forces.”

While the poetic works of the Palestinian poets like Mahmoud Darwish, Rashid Husain, Izz al-Din al-Manasra, Fadwa Tuqan, Ahmad Dahbour and others call for the change of the climacteric political status quo and ask Palestinians to promote themselves socially, other poems by some international activists and poets describe the egregious situation in Palestine and in particular in the Gaza Strip. The most well-known cosmopolitan poems that stand for the Palestinian people are The love birds (2016), Weeping tears for Gaza (n.d.), Pain (n.d.), Let the land choose (n.d.), What I will – video and 1. Gaza – video (n.d.) and Words, Words, Sixty (n.d.) by Brinda Runghsawmee, Marguerite Rami, Pande Manoylov, Farrah Sarafa, Suheir Hammad, David Roberts, Richard Arnold respectively. Other poems are posted on The War Poetry Website: Palestine-War and Peace Poetry. Moreover, a group of poets from different countries of the world attempts to stimulate the emotions of the readers for Palestinians in Palestine and in the diaspora. They in fact discuss different subjects relevant to the life of the refugees, prison life and hunger strike, the kidnapping or burning to death of Palestinian kids and entire families, and other miscellaneous and analogous themes. On that, the concomitant poems to the previous themes are The tent of nations (2016), Raids (2016), Prison hunger strike (2016), Only your blood (2016) by the American poet Anne Champion. More poems are available on the website Unsettling America Poems for Palestine. Further, Laila Sumpton, member of the Keats House Poetry Forum, as well showed her sincere sympathy towards Palestinians through her published verse on the website Poems for Palestine. Suzan Abulhawa, esteemed Palestinian-American author and social activist, composed her poetry collection My Voice Sought the Wind (2013) to talk about the Palestinian experience.

Add to what has been already mentioned with regard to sociopolitical poetry, many other cosmopolitan Palestinian poets have touched on the Palestinian cause via their verses that address the themes of peace, freedom of males and female detainees, equality, hopes, dreams and aspirations. This poetic contribution includes the works of Suheir Hammad, Lisa Suhair Majaj, Naomi Shihab Nye and William S. Peters.

Due to the innumerable poetic missions upholding the Palestinian situation, this research correspondingly mentions some of the renowned Arabic and cosmopolitan websites that contain such trenchant works as Hello, Poetry; The New Arab: Poems about Palestine; Poem from Palestine: A dream under the Willow Tree; Palestine-Israel Journal: leave Gaza in Peace; CounterPunch: Poetry, Palestine and the Language of Resistance and so on. Regarding Palestinian poetry, the section (2.3) Modern Arab-literature from Palestine, which is devoted to the discussion of Palestinian literature in general, mentions some of the most influential Palestinian poets and their dedicated works to the Palestinian question.

Consequently, literary fiction is as a transmitter that conveys to the world an almost full image of a given people in a certain period under specific serious circumstances. However, it does this indirectly. Ade and Okunoye (2008, p.2-3) affirm that “the creative writer is not bound to give facts accurately in terms of the time period, place and order of events.” Literary fiction in particular, including al-riwaya (the novel), al-qissa al-qasira (the short story), al-shier (poetry), drama, etc. is a robust instrument for the sake of the autochthonous people, who already have problems and miseries either because of the unjust regime or because of some social watersheds that have taken place with the passage of time.

2.2.3.2 Literary nonfiction

Literary nonfiction plays a vital role in representing the problems, needs and aspirations of a certain nation without resorting to the employment of the imaginary places, characters or events; rather, via an ostensible exhibition. In the following paragraphs, I, the researcher, shine a light on each one of the most common forms of literary nonfiction, in order to explicate how they involve in the backing of humane issues. Literary fiction consists of the following forms.

A- Al-sira al-thatia (Autobiography)

William Tylor firstly used Al-sira al-thatia or the autobiography in 1797, it is clearly manifest that it reveals someone's life under personal or public circumstances within chronological order of events. It is also an ideal tool to export veritable facts that polarize the concern of the reader towards specific issues that the writers originally intended to convey. The self-narrative writer is the representative of all of his people, i.e. when the autobiographer writes about his or her experiences in some political or social circumstances in a certain area, his or her narrative implies the collective experiences. Therefore, it is doubtless a source of understanding personal and collective circumstances for the aboriginal population. For that, Fivush and Haden (2008, p.ix) say, "the use of language to exchange message about 'my' experience, 'your' experience, and 'our' experience constitutes a 'taking off' point for further development of self-understanding."

The themes of the some international sociopolitical autobiographies, like Long Walk to Freedom (Nelson Mandela et al., 2011), The Singapore Story (Lee Kuan Yew, 2015), The Story of My Experiments With Truth (Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi and Mahatma Gandhi, 1983), and others are exceedingly analogous to the themes of the starry Palestinian autobiographies that focus on the subjects of liberation, legitimate rights, struggle for freedom, and the recalling of the past days. Some international autobiographers advocate for the Palestinian political predicaments via reciting their lives with Palestinians. Prisoner of Love (2003) is a posthumous and breathtaking self-narrative by the French the novelist Jean Genet. It in fact recites Genet's two-year experience in the Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan and Lebanon. Genet was one of the first men to be let into the camps after the 1982 Israeli massacre in Sabra and Satilla. In addition to that, the national and international autobiography Out of Place (2000) by one of the most important Palestinian-American intellectuals of our time Edward Said brings an extraordinary story of exile and a celebration of an irrecoverable past. Similarly, the compassionate and compelling memoir Born in Jerusalem, Born Palestine (2012) by a versatile, cosmopolitan and highly intelligent Palestinian-American writer Jacob J. Nammar, provides a message of hope and sedulity against all odds and others. Further, I Shall not Hate: A Gaza doctor's journey on the road to peace and human dignity (2012) by the Palestinian-Canadian author Izzeldin Abuelaish and In Search of Fatima (2009) by Ghada Karmi are adept at presenting the Palestinian case to non-Arabic speaking audience. Moreover, Fast Times in Palestine: a love affair with a homeless homeland (2013) by Pamela J. Olson, It's Easier to Reach Heaven Than the End of the Street: a Jerusalem memoir (2009) by Emma Williams and others assist to promulgate Palestinian daily life to the world.

Arab autobiographers contribute slightly to the Palestinian issue, as they did not experience the exile, the killing and other atrocious happenings. This research finds it essential to mention some of them, like The Palestinian Catastrophe: the memoir of Abdullah Altal the leader of Jerusalem battle (1959) in Arabic, The War of the Three Days: the memoirs of the General Mohammad Fawzi, the former minister of war (1988), and The War and Resistance and the Faction (2005) by the Lebanese author George Hawim, in Arabic. These autobiographies can be a proof on the course of the 1948 battle & 1967 war that in the courses of which, Palestine was lost. They can also revive some of the realistic but forgotten reasons for the great change in the Palestinian identity. Schwalm (2014, para.2) says, “oscillating between the struggle for truthfulness and creativity, between oblivion, concealment, hypocrisy, self-deception and self-conscious fictionalizing, autobiography renders a story of personality formation.” Thus, the autobiography serves self-creation, creativity, self-reliance. Some of the most well-known Palestinian autobiographers, who depict the harsh circumstances of Palestinians from 1948 until now, are registered in the section (2.3), titled Modern Arab-literature from Palestine.

B- Al-sīra (Biography)

Al-sīra, or the biography “is a story of a person's life, written by another author. The writer of a biography is called a biographer while the person written about is known as the subject or biographee” (Nordquist 2017, para.1). However, what does the biography look like? How does the biography advocate a specific question to the world? What is the most outstanding property of the biography?

The biography usually adopts the shape of narratives; it goes chronologically through different phases of the biographee's life. The biography serves a particular case by showing the conditions of the subject who has genuinely lived under a grossly unfair sociopolitical regime. It is also reasoned to be an instrument with which one can defend a definite cause, especially if it precisely talks about someone who spent most of his days fighting for his people's freedom and autonomy, or if it narrates and probes the life of a person, who lived under brutal sociopolitical conjunctures. For example, Che Guevara: a revolutionary life by Jon Anderson in 2010, and The Girl Who Escaped Isis: this is my story by Farida Khalaf and Andrea C. Hoffmann in 2016 act as advocates for the victims of injustice and oppression. The biography largely aids a specific issue due to its objective recitation; “the biographer is perhaps better employed ‘exposing’ rather than ‘imposing’ moral judgment” (Winters 2012, para.14). Overall, the themes of sociopolitical biographies, beyond the viewing of different persons in the midst of conflicts, are common; “to make the past present, to bring the distant near...” (Winters 2012, para.10), and to bring to the world, through an objective method, the influential but derelict chronological narrative of one’s life. By the virtue of the common purpose of the biographies, the international biographies go thematically hand in hand with the cosmopolitan biographies that talk about influential Palestinian personalities who faced the siege by the Israeli government in Palestine. The most cosmopolitan famed autobiographies in this field are Yasir Arafat (2005) by Barry Robin and Judith Colp Rubin, Arafat’s War: the man and his battle for Israeli conquest (2007) by Efraim Karsh, The Mystery of Arafat (1995) by Danny Rubinstein, Edward Said: a critical reader (1992) by Michael Sprinker, Yaser Arafat: psychological profile and strategic analysis (2002) by Shaul Kimhi et.al. With Arafat in Palestine: the history of the Palestinian-Italian relations (n.d.) by Antonio Ruby and others. More Arab writers touch on the lives of other Palestinian figures, including Fadwa Tuqan, Adel Zaiter, Mahmoud Darwish, Ghasan Kanafani and other figures who had influenced Palestinian history, and who had also stood against oppression, occupation and social inequity in Palestine.

C- Books and Articles

The historical and national writings or articles are literary nonfiction that advocate amply for people in unfortunate, despotic and repressive circumstances, and those who are subject to slavery, poverty, racism, financial inequity and social authoritarianism. Such books and articles in fact reveal important information relevant to a certain case of a particular group of people. The prominent writers, who indeed shine in this field and succeed to employ descriptive historical literature as advocacy, are Toni Morrison, Mario Vargas Llosa, Gayatri Spivak, Frantz Fanon, Ray Bradbury, Chinua Achebe, Derek Walcott, the Palestinian-American authors Edward Said, and Rashid Al-Khalidi amongst others. They all care about presenting and publicizing the general matters of different people to a greater number of masses. In the Palestinian case, for example, a variety of historical and descriptive books describe the situation thoroughly, like Kingdom of Olives and Ash: Writers Confront the Occupation (2017) by Michael Chabon, The Ethnic Cleansing of Palestine (2006) by Ilan Pappé, Palestine: Peace Not Apartheid (2006) by Jimmy Carter, Witness in Palestine (2006) by Anna Baltzer, Drinking the Sea at Gaza: Days and Nights in a Land under Siege (1996) by Amira Has, Letters to Palestine: Writers Respond to War and Occupation (2015) Vijay Prashad, Letters from Palestine: Palestinians Speak Out about Their Lives, Their Country, and the Power of Nonviolence (2010) by Kenneth Ring and Ghassan Abudullah, Freedom is a Constant Struggle (2015) by Angela Y. Davis, The Plight of the Palestinians: A Long History of Destruction (2010) by Willian A. Cook, and the works of Steve Lendman, Gideon Polya, Chris Hedges, Karen Koning Abu Zayd. The keynotes of these books are the Palestinian question. In addition to other literary works, such as the critical writing by Zionists of Erich Fried, Israel palestina paz o guerra santa (2016) by Mario Vargas Llosa, Freedom Sailor: the Maiden Voyage of the Free Gaza Movement and how we Succeeded in Spite of Ourselves (2012) by Greta Berlin and Bill Dienst, MD, the reminiscent book Why Israel? (2015) by Suraya Dadoo and Firoz Osman, Image and Reality of the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict (2016) and the Rise and Fall of Palestine (1996) by the Jewish political scientist, activist and professor Norman G. Finkelstein, Occupation, War and Exile: the Consequences of the Gulf Conflict (1990-91) for Palestinians in Kuwait (n.d.) by Victoria Mason, Refugees of the Revolution: Experiences of Palestinian Exile (2013) by Diana Allan, Palestinians Born in Exile (2005) by Juliane Hammer, Blood and Religion: the Unmasking of the Jewish and Democratic State (2006) by Jonathan Cook, Israel and the Clash of Civilizations: Iraq, Iran and the Plan to Remake the Middle East (2008) by Jonathan Cook, Disappearing Palestine: Israel's Experiments in Human Despair (2008) by Jonathan Cook, The Palestinian people (2003) by Baruch Kimmerling and Joel S. Migdal, Palestine (1993) by Joe Sacco, in addition to the journalistic critical writings, like Netanyahu's ruthless instinct for political survival remains undimmed (2008), Fourteen-year-old Ghada was the latest victim of Israel's dehumanizing machine (2018) etc. by Jonathan Cook, Palestine (1993) by Joe Sacco, The Lemon tree: an Arab, a Jew, and the heart of the Middle East (2006) by Sandy Tolan, Israeli apartheid: a beginner's guide (2009) and Palestinians in Israel: segregation, discrimination and democracy (2011) by Ben White, Beware the Cyclops (n.d.) by Wole Soyinka, Palestine Twilight: The Murder of Dr. Albert Glock and the Archaeology of the Holy Land (2001) by Edward Fox, This is not a border (2017) by John Coetzee et al., Our Harsh Logic: the Israeli Soldiers' Testimony from the Occupied Territories (2012) by Shovrim shetiḳah, and others available on the website Goodreads: best books about Palestine recount and delineate the political status quo, in addition to other opposing articles to the Israeli measurements by William José Saramago, Harold Pinter, Günter Gras, Orhan Pamuk, to name but a few. Moreover, there are some Jewish writers standing against the existence of Israel in Palestine, and boosted Palestinians' stance before the world, like Michael Chabon, Mois Benarroch, Norman G. Finkelstein. In this regard, Al-Shareef (2016, para.1) says, "there is a number of Jewish writers and intellectuals who have not been persuaded by of the false pretenses of the so-called Israel and were able to know that it conquers Palestinian citizens and seizes their the lands..." (my translation from Arabic).

On the other hand, other Arab writers and historians tended to the writing of different books to talk about that Palestinian crisis and condemn the Israeli occupation. The most eminent Arabic books in this range are: Palestine between the fact of the Jews and the lie of the Talmud (2008) in Arabic by Aḥmad Saalim Raḥḥaal from Jordan, Errors must be corrected in the history: the road to Jerusalem the Palestinian issue (n.d.), and the documents of the war of Palestine (1989) in Arabic by the Egyptian intellectuals Jamal 'Abd al-Hadi Mas'ūd and Aḥmad Rif'at Sayyid, respectively. The efforts of those international and Arab writers plainly go hand in hand with the endeavours of the sociopolitical Palestinian writers, including Khalid Jumma, Bayān Hūt, Rehab Kan'an, Jamil Salhout and others.

D- Wathaikiat (Documentaries)

The Wathaikiat or documentaries display and broadcast facts and information about topics similar to the previously mentioned ones. They mostly contribute to the revealing, enlightening and the internationalizing of the historical, conventional, financial, sociopolitical matters of a given person or society. These issues might have lain dormant and unknown unless such televised and broadcasted programs had brought them to public attention. They precisely visualize the topics of colonization, occupation, poverty, religious prejudice, political injustice, racial discrimination, human rights, financial and social injustice. Desktop Documentaries (2013, para.1-2) comments, “documentaries attempt to change or improve society, build awareness, and to bring to light a certain cause with the hope that their film will help galvanize the masses to demand change and to uncover a hidden truth or mystery.” On the Palestinian level, directed and televised programs and documentaries directly advocate for the Palestinian political situation. As they draw inspiration from written novels, autobiographies or memories, I, the researcher, mention some of the films and documentaries, such as the 2011 documentary Palestine is still the Issue which is inspired by the novel Drinking the sea at Gaza: days and nights in a land under siege (1996) by the pro-Palestine Israeli writer Amira Has, Al-Nakba, Episodes 1-4 in the year of 2013; Stories From the Intifada in 2014; the Syrian movie The Dupes in 1972 which is directed by the Egyptian director Tawfi Saleh and taken mainly from the Arabic-Palestinian novel Men in the Sun (1963) by Kanafani, Budrus: It take a Village to Unite the Most Divided People on Earth in 2010, which is directed by Brazilian born Julia Bacha, and the Palestinian-Jordanian film When I saw you in 2012, Amreeka in 2009 by the first-time Palestinian director Cherien Dabis and the American director Laura Soter. The most impressive filmmakers regarding Palestine are Ronen Berelovich, Louis Theroux, John Pilger, Anna Baltzer, Vibeke Løkkeberg, B.Z. Goldberg, and others.

In General, there are other forms of literature, such interviews, chronologies, radio broadcasts that help to the transport to the world some given perspectives of people who in fact have some questions about their daily sociopolitical affairs. Such literary participations attempt either to gain support for such standpoints, or to resist the power, which wipes out their natural and licit rights. Thus, literature is not only employed to entertain, amuse, or even to fill the leisure of the readers, but also to serve humanity. Novels, short stories, poetry, autobiographies, biographies, documentaries, descriptive writing and texts, films, documentaries, etc. tell us the most substantial developments of the lives of the folks in miserable and unstable life. As a result, the readers should go behind the form of any literary work, and see the embedded meaning borne by the content. Literature is believed thus to be a weapon in the hand of the proponents of vulnerable peoples and paupers and in the hands of the oppressed peoples themselves also, as in the case of modern Arab-language literature from Palestine.

2.3 Modern Arab-literature from Palestine

Palestinian oeuvre is the product of neither the Nakba nor the Naksa. They rather date back decades, even a century. On that, Malhas (1970, p.6) says, "Palestinian literature started neither in 1948 nor in 1967, but it has roots that already mixed with ancient and modern Arabian roots" (my translation from Arabic). For instance, the first novel written in Palestine was Om Hakeem (The Mother of Hakeem) in 1887 by the Palestinian writer Mohammed Ahmad Al-Tamimi. In this section, however, I shall refrain from tracking the emergence and evolution of Palestinian cause and topic in Palestinian literature in particular, and in Arabic literature in general ab ovo. Rather, it casts light on modern Palestinian literature in the period of the start of the end of the British mandate in Palestine, and the commencement of the new era of the state of Israel in late 1947 and early 1948. However, in some cases, it will be relevant to point to the appearance of these topics in both literatures in arguments prior to this date. This section is divided into subdivisions. The first subdivision shortly defines modern Arab-literature from Palestine. The second subset highlights the most pertinent arguments for the contribution of Palestinian literature in Arabic to the Palestinian cause. It also mentions the numbers of Palestinian literary works in the category of novels, short story collections, anthologies of poetry, drama, autobiographies, biographies, testimonials and prose texts that have been produced in Arabic between 1948 and 2019.

2.3.1 What is Modern Arab-Literature from Palestine?

Largely, literature changes and evolves relying on where, when it was produced, the background and experience of its authors. This explains the division of Arabic literature into categories such as Palestinian literature, Lebanese literature, Jordanian literature, Syrian literature. This is despite the fact that these literatures come from adjacent countries that were part of one larger state in the past. Within the progress of time, and due to political, social and spatiotemporal watersheds that occurred in Palestine in particular, the prevailing themes of Palestinian literature differed from other Arab literature to suit and describe the milieu from which literary works emerged. Abu-Manneh (2016, p.19) says, "the pressure to respond to such a massive sociopolitical crisis of dispossession and exile distinguishes Palestinian history from the rest of Arab history and the Palestinian novel from other Arab novels. No other Arab people faced imperialism and settler colonialism as distinct yet converging forces, struggled against both. But what is modern Palestinian literature?"

A variety of critics define Palestinian literature as a product of the Palestinian intelligentsia. Though, as Molasky (1999, p.9) says, “the definition of Palestinian literature demands more precise definition of who is a Palestinian.” This question takes us to the year of 1948 when the Palestinian populace fled or were expelled from the area that became later Israel. Those expatriates have in fact formed three groups that still exist to this day. The first group of Palestinians continued to live within the borders of the newly established state of Israel, which is recently estimated at 1,658,000, constituting 20.7% of Israel’s population. The second group moved out to live in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip; where other Palestinians simply remained there numbering 4.7 million people in 2017. The third group included Palestinian expatriates, either in the Arab countries, USA or Europe, estimated at 6,000,000 refugees, according to the 2017 census. Since the day of the Nakba in 1948, Palestinian literature has been untethered from present and historical Palestinian territory. Instead, when referring to modern Palestinian literature, “we are really faced by two types: the first one which was written by scholars who lived in Palestine, and the other one was produced by writers in the exile.”

Palestinian literature is divided into two main parts: the first one is the literature of the occupied land which Ghassan Kanafani called Resistance Literature, Yūsuf Khaṭīb called it 'the literary collection of the occupied homeland'. Tewfik Zayya called it 'revolutionary poetry or 'revolutionary literature'. The second one is the literature of exile, or the literature of immigrants, which the expatriate writers created outside of Palestine (see Jayyusi, 1992; Schwalm, 2014; Molasky, 1999; Malhas, 1970). Palestinian literature, as a perfect tool of advocacy, is one of the copious Arabic literatures. It is also an offshoot of postcolonial literature in general. It addresses some political, social, and “emotional issues that colonization brought and left behind” (Harrison, n.d., n.p.). At the same time, it is almost different from other territory bound literatures that come from former colonies, like India, Jamaica, Tunisia, Algeria, Syria, and Lebanon, in which the British and French mandates ended more than half a century ago. On the contrary, Amit-Kochavi (2000, p.53) confirms, “unlike the situation with its Arabic counterparts, Palestinian literature’s affiliation is national rather than territorial - up to the 1948 War, it was territory-bound. Since then, due to the harsh historical and political circumstances, it has become a literature written by Palestinians.” From a homologous point of view, “sociopolitical crisis marks the Palestinian novel [literature] off from the Arab novel [literature]. No other Arab people faced both imperialism and settler-colonialism, struggled against both” (Abu-Manneh 2016, p.19). To give a synopsis, modern Palestinian literature is about 70 years old and exists in myriads literary volumes. In other words, modern Palestinian literature comprises wide array literary forms, including novels, short stories, poems, autobiographies, biographies, hymns, texts and testimonies. These literary forms grew in 1948 and beyond. Thus, this type of literature is not territorial-based, it is rather written by Palestinians, who live in Palestine or abroad and are linked by their land and identity. It emerged to advocate for the Palestinian cause and became a tool of resistance. Palestinian literature belongs to Auerbachian literature as it borrows its themes from real life.

2.3.2 Palestinian literature as advocacy

As a matter of fact, like other literatures, Palestinian literature is not just words on Paper. It “was formed socially and politically according to the totalitarian and cultural understanding of Palestinian literature. And the equation for the Palestinian poet since the Catastrophe 1948 was that Israel is the enemy which geographically occupied Palestine and denied the identity of its people” (Tamimi and Battat 2010, p.17) (my translation from Arabic). In other words, Palestine has suffered for more than 70 years. Starting with the Nakba in the late 1947 and early 1948, when more than 700, 000 women, menfolk, children and old people were expelled from their home. It also resulted in the demolition of Palestinian towns and villages, the killing of children and the pregnant, the rape of young girls. Later, the Setback or the Naksa on 5 June 1967 was the second watershed in the life of the Palestinian citizens, especially after the rout inflicted on the Arab armies in the Six-Day War. The upshot of this battle, besides killing of more than 20,000 Arabs, was the conquering of other areas in Palestine and the establishment of the settlements in the West Bank, including some parts of the capital, Jerusalem. The third event was the First Intifada in 1987, Al- Intifada Al-Oula or Intifadat Al- Hijara in Arabic. It started on December 8 and lasted until the signing of Oslo II in 1993. This First Intifada was characterized by bloodthirsty and excessively brutal practices, including the killing of more than 1300, the demolition of houses, confinement of protesters and the deportation of political activists. The Second Intifada or Al-Aqsa Intifada on the other hand is the fourth current turning point in Palestine. It has been going on since 2000. The death toll of this Intifada including civilians and military is estimated at 3000 Palestinians, quite apart from the destruction of houses, detainment of boys in their adolescence, the setting up blockades between cities, even between villages, and the bombing of many civilian targets.

These adversities did not hinder literary productivity of the writers. On the contrary, these events inspired their minds and hearts to generate literary outputs insofar as they touch their bitter reality.

For close to seven decades, it has: Palestinians’ rich literary production has contributed to Arabic letters, taken part in all its literary experiments, and left enduring poetry collections, novels, plays, and memoirs. Today, Palestinians write in multiple languages and have different nationalities, cultural influences, and varied aesthetics; many also belong to other literary traditions and nations. Their movements are anything but permanent. Despite their disparate experiences, all stem from a place and a memory that have marked their consciousness and their imagination (Handal, 2015).

The emergence of iconoclastic and ineffable Palestinian literature against the Israeli actions is similar to the advent of Black Panthers in the USA. The conception of this party was a riposte to the assassination of Malcolm X. In the same course, Palestinian literature has also “become an advocate for the people who were exposed to the previously mentioned actions, the land, which is being ransacked and usurped daily and the 7.5 million refugees in different area of the world. Add to that the plots of land and orchards that they left behind” (Tamimi and Battat, 2010; Yahya, 2007) (my translation from Arabic). Palestinian literary works also arise to appreciate and glorify the martyrs who sacrificed themselves for the soil of the homeland. Thus, the major themes that prevail the great bulk of the Palestinian literature are the Nakba, the Naksa, the First and the Second Intifada, Palestinian refugees and the right to return, the martyrs and their sacrifice, the stolen land, the long-term tribulations, the civil war in Lebanon which resulted in the killing of thousands of innocent Palestinian and Lebanese people. In addition, Palestinian literary works mention other miscellaneous minor topics pertinent to the Palestinian social question (see Kanafani, 1968); Darraj, 2006; Abu-Osba, 2009).

Palestinian literature, according to its form, is identical to other international literatures. In other words, it includes literary fiction and literary nonfiction presented through either prose or fervent verse. In the following subsection, I discuss the roles of Palestinian literary forms in the Palestinian issue and document the number of works representing each form. From this we can ascertain the exact percentage of Palestinian literary works that have been translated into the English language since 1948 up until to now.

2.3.2.1 Palestinian literary fiction

A- Al-riwaya Al-Falatinina (Palestinian Novel)

The Palestinian novel, as postcolonial piece of writing, is totally influenced by the sociopolitical positions developed during the twentieth century, especially since 1948. Thus, Palestinian novelists do not write randomly. They, however, want to resist the status quo, express suppressed sentiments, revolt against colonial occupation. Regarding the veritable contributions of the Palestinian novels, Abu-Mennah (2016, p.19) points out, “mass, revolt, contradictions of reality, real communication, strong causality, all will come to mark the emerging Palestinian novel.” Similarly, the Palestinian novels played and are still playing the role of the advocate for the landless, colonially dispossessed folk who lost everything that they already barely had. Abu-Manneh (2016, p.2) also affirms, “because of the social and political situation, novels affirmed universal categories: humanism, self-sacrifice as collective redemption...” In addition, the Palestinian novels expose thoroughly all images of sufferance, abuse, forcible emigration, killing, confinement. Metwaly (2003) adds, “the most prominent themes in the Palestinian novels are the Palestinian question, including the memory, compulsory detention, tragic past, nostalgia, paupers in the exile, stolen land, oppression, abuse, self-reliance, stones and the Intifadas” (my translation from Arabic). Further, Palestinian literature in general and the novels in particular are tied tightly to the revolution against the Zionist-colonial subservience. In other words, “the ebb and flow of revolution, which stands in the face of the Zionist expansion in Palestine, are the real companion of the Palestinian novel..., the revolutionary period deepens and generates the most famous and widely read the Palestinian novels since 1948” (see Kanafani, 1968; Abu-Manneh, 2016).

Typically, some of the Palestinian novels derive their titles from the status quo and give an overall description of the Palestinian question. For example, the translated novel Men in the Sun (1999) by Ghassan Kanafani, which was published in Arabic in 1963, is a fraught depiction of the death of three Palestinians under the scorching sun of the desert. Kanafani’s second novel Returning to Haifa draws on the Palestinian-Israeli clash over the reality of the Nakba 1948. Moreover, Mureed Al-Barghouti’s translated novel I Saw Ramallah (2001) is considered an autobiographical novel. It portrays the writer’s return to his homeland after years of expatriation. Additionally, the novel The Book of Disappearance (2019) by Ibtisam Azim in English translation points to the disappearance of Palestinians in 1948 because of the genocides committed by the people of the promised land, as the Israelis alleged. Similarly, the 2011 Arab-language novel Lail Ghaza al Phosphori (The Phosphoric Night of Gaza) by Walīd Hawdalī reveals the miserable life in Gaza due to the continual Israeli air raids against civilian targets. May wa-malḥ (Water and Salt) in 2017 in Arabic by Anwar Hamid is a candid title of a novel that is about the main meals of the Palestinian captives behind bars, who wage hunger strike from time to time as a riposte to the ruthless abuse of the Israeli prison administration against them. The title of the novel of Ibn Al-mukhayyam (n.d.) (The Son of the Camp) in Arabic by Fādī Shaḥrūr is also a portrayal of the life in the Palestinian refugee camps. He also points to the reasons for the strange and drastic behaviours of the young inhabitants of the camp. Whether the title matches the theme or not, the tenors of most of the Palestinian novels largely concentrate on the Palestinian sociopolitical cause.

Palestinian novelists grew in prominence on the heels of the Nakba; throughout the period of the 1950s to the 1970s, that experienced the worst occupation of its kind. On the one hand, some statistical studies stated that the number of the Palestinian and Jordanian novels in general exceeded 650 novels. While other specific statistical studies on the Palestinian novels confirmed that the number of the Palestinian novels in specific since 1948 until 2010 was about 460 novels. On the other hand, other statistics published on noonpost website on the 13th May 2014 show that the number of the Palestinian novels published since the Nakba until 2010 is 600. Ruwaylī (2018, para.11) adds, “the tracker of the Arabic-Palestinian literature since the first embryonic beginnings of the Palestinian novels in the year of 1876, and its earnest crystallization via the emergence of Al-warith (the heir) by Khalil Baidus in 1920, until the last produced novel in 2017, i.e. more than nine hundred Palestinian novels kept up with the journey of the Palestinian people in the land of exile and diaspora” (my translation from Arabic).

On the other hand, this research has found that the Palestinian novels written directly in Arabic by Palestinian intellectuals inside and outside of Palestine between the Period of 1948 and 2019 are approximately 1360. The first group of Palestinian novelists, who either continued to live in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, as of 1967, or were born in what is now called Israel, employ novels as a tool to defend Palestine, to portray their suffering, to talk about the sociopolitical problems, and to show the miserable life of the Palestinian prisoners.

Novelistic efforts emerge in response to historical political shifts in certain places. In this respect, Abu-Manneh (2016, p.6) says, the “novelistic form responded to major historical shifts and revolutionary democratic transformations in the East as well.” Specifically, the historical Palestinian conjunctures and crises constitute novels from Palestine, and the oeuvres of the Arab and Palestinian novelists reciprocally constitute the core of the history of Palestine. Since the Nakba is the main shift of the lives of the Palestinian people, the vast majority of the Palestinian novels portray it in their pages. To be precise, “the Palestinian novels that shed light on the Nakba (1948) are estimated at 80%” (noonpost 2014, para.5). The Palestinian most-well known novels in this field are the Mornings in Jenin (2006) by Susan Abulhawa that was written originally in English, Returning to Haifa (1969) and Men in The Sun (1963) by Ghassan Kanafani that were translated into English in the years of 1974, and between 1997 and 1999 by Barbara Harlow and Karen Riley, and Hilary Kilpatrick respectively. They both portrayed the daily lives of Palestinians who lost their land and children in 1948. Ghassan Kanafani’s other novel, All That's Left to You (2004) in English translation talks about disillusionment after the year of 1948. In addition, the 1990 Arabic novels Alzawraq (The Canoe) in 1990 by Ḥasan Sāmī Yūsuf and Ḥafnat rimāl (A Handful of Grains of Sand) in 1964 by Nāṣir al-Dīn Nashāshībī mainly take place in the lands that are now called Israel after the majority of the inhabitants were killed or exiled. The latter shows the Deir Yassin massacre in 1948. The 2012 novel Time of White Horses by Ibrahim Nasrallah in English translation addresses the events preceding the year of 1948. He builds this individual memory out of the collective memory of Palestinians in 1948. In addition, the 1997 novel The Secret Life of Saeed the Pessoptimist in Arabic by Emile Habibi recounts the meeting between the writer and the homeless ghosts whose homes were demolished or stolen after the 1948 massacre. Moreover, the translated novel In Search of Walid Masoud (2000) by Jabra Ibrahim Jabra focuses on the distortion of the names of the villages that were demolished or evacuated in 1948. For example, Um Al’aynwas later renamed Ramat Yousef by the Israelis. Furthermore, the translated novel The Woman from Tantoura (2014), which was written by Radwa Ashur, talks about a family from Tantoura that was forced to flee to Lebanon 1948. In English translation, The Book of Disappearance (2019) by Ibtisām ‘Āzim talks about the memory of loss and loss of memory. In the same field, the translated novel A Lake Beyond the Wind (1999) by Yaḥyá Yakhliḥ talks about Sea of Galilee which turned green due to algae after the being occupied by Israel. Fractured Destinies (2018) by Rabai Al-Madhoon in English translation talks about some Palestinian characters that hold different citizenships, other than the Palestinian nationality. One of these characters was Juli who lived in London after 1948. She asked to be cremated after her death so that her daughter could take the ashes to her birthplace in Palestine. The English novel Salt Houses (2017) by the Palestinian-American writer Hala Alyan shows the luxurious life of wealthy Palestinian refugees. However, she tries to portray even this atypical material comfort among parts of the post-Nakba diaspora as something reached despite experiencing injustice, deprivation and exile.

The themes and leitmotifs of the post-1948 novels commonly include freedom, anxiety, protest, struggle, social progress, individual salvation, rebellion and heroism. The Palestinian novel varied nonetheless, to keep pace with the changes of the last seven decades. On this topic, Abu-Manneh (2014, p.512) adds, “the trajectory of the Palestinian novel traces deep connections between revolutionary praxis and realism -until the early 1970s- and between collective defeat, revolutionary recoil, and modernism -especially after 1973 and the rise of a US-aligned regional order marked by oil wealth and political degeneration rather than by revolutionary aspirations.”

Palestinian novelists were in fact tightly attuned to the developments at the sociopolitical level. They express noble and sublime claims through their writings. Moreover,

They [the Palestinian novelists] affirmed universal categories: humanism, self-sacrifice as collective redemption, mutuality, reciprocity, and self-realization. When I write about a Palestinian family, Kanafani...succinctly puts it, “I am in reality writing about a human experience. There isn’t an event in the world which is not represented in the Palestinian tragedy. And when I depict the wretchedness of Palestinians, I am in truth representing the Palestinian as a symbol of world misery.” Actuality, realism, and humanism combine to articulate dispossession (Abu-Manneh 2016, p.73).

Not only the Nakba, but also the Naksa (1967) propelled the Palestinian writers to write more and more novels. Najjār (2011) says, “he [Hafiz Al-Barghouti] recalls the return of a lot of novelists to write about the Nakba (1948), the Naksa (1967), keeping pace with their ancestors to resurrect the old spirit of resistance” (my translation from Arabic). The most famous Palestinian works translated into English in this field are The Stars Over Jericho by Layānā Badr which talks about the events that took place after the year of 1967 in Tel al-Zaatar refugee camp in the north east of Beirut. In the same area, the novel The Wild Thorn by Sahar Khalifeh is about Osama, the Palestinian protagonist, who lived in the Gulf region after the 1967 Naksa. It also touches on Palestinians who had to work in Israel but this was hard. In her translated novel The Image, The Icon and The Old Covenant (2007), Sahar Khalifeh presents a picture of Jerusalem before the 1967 war. The protagonist Ibrahim remembers his old love for a Christian girl in the old days; before 1967 as a way to compare the past with the present; after 1967. Izzat Ghazzawi argues against the pretexts used by Israel to justify occupying the rest of Palestine in his novel Nebo Mountain (1998) in English translation.

In addition to the Naksa, the First Intifada, which lasted from December 1987 until the Madrid Conference in 1991, urged a few scholars to depict its events through novels. Thus, this project finds out that about 20 novels out of (drop number, stats) the Palestinian novels touched on this six-year-old period. In the same vein, the Second Uprising, also known as the Al-Aqsa Intifada in 2000 inspired very few Palestinian novelists. As noted, the First and Second Intifada had a little interest in the Palestinian writings as they cling mostly to the past; before 1967. In this context, al-Tamimi (2016) says, “one of the first things that come into the mind of the reader of Palestinian novels produced after the Second Intifada is the direct association with the past days. Thus, the present is almost absent from most of those works.” In Arabic, the Palestinian novel Gaza 87 (2017) by Yusrī Ghūl discusses the events of the First Intifada and tackles espionage as one of the problems Palestinians faced. The most well-known Palestinian novels translated into English on the Second Intifada are The End of Spring (2007), Gaza Weddings (2017) and The Crossing (n.d.). While The End of Spring by Sahar Khalifeh talks about the Israeli invasion of the West Bank in 2002, the novel Gaza Weddings by Ibrahim Nasrallah documents the war on Gaza during the first years of the Second Intifada. On the same period, The Crossing by Ziyād ‘Abd al-Fattāḥ shows the difficulties the Gazans encounter while traveling from Rafah in Gaza to the Egyptian Rafah, which is 200 meters away.

Because of the Israeli policy of detainment, which not few Palestinian men and woman experienced, prison novels ratcheted up to dozens; they describe generally the life of the prisoners before, during or after the period of their incarceration. These novels focus primarily on the themes of freedom, inhumane Israeli treatment of the Palestinian prisoners, the longing of the prisoners to return to their families. The first prison novel written behind bars was Babūr al-Kāz (The kerosene Burner) by Muḥammad ‘Alyān in 1976.

Other novels described the lives of Palestinians in the diaspora, especially after experiences such as Black September in Jordan between 16 and 27 September 1970, with actions continuing until 17 July 1971, and the Lebanese Civil War, which lasted from 1975 until 1990. This study shows that approximately a dozen novels describe the sociopolitical situation of Palestinians beyond the borders of Palestine. For example, the translated novel A Balcony Over The Fakihani (1998) by Layānā Badr 1989 talks about the role of Palestinian women in the Palestinian resistance in exile. The Eye of the Mirror (1997) by Layānā Badr in English translation tracks the events of the Lebanese Civil War in 1975. Similarly, Little Mountain (1989) and Gate of the Sun (2006) by the Lebanese novelist Elias Khoury in English translation narrate the Lebanese Civil War. Little Mountain is one of five novelistic volumes in which Khoury recounts his childhood memories of peacetime before the 1975 war. The novel Gate of the Sun includes historical facts about the 1948 Nakba and the 1974 war. “What distinguishes this novel is the relation between the political events and its love-stories” (Jaggi 2015, para.3).

The pre-Nakba (1948) novels were scarce, but dedicated primarily to revolt against stifling traditions, dependence, backwardness, economic corruption, feudalism and the concentration of land in the hands of prestigious families. The Arabic-Palestinian novel Om Hakeem (n.d.) (The Mother of Hakeem) which was written in the second half of the 19th century by Muḥammad Tamīmī, concentrated on the prevailing social matters of its time. Additionally, Al-warith (The Heir) published in Arabic in 1920 by Khalil Baidus, the pioneering Palestinian short story writer, recounted the love affair between a young Palestinian man and a Jewish girl. It also touched slightly on the Second World War. The 1946 Arabic novel Ṣurākh fī layl ṭawīl (Scream in a Long Night) by Jabrā Ibrāhīm Jabrā arose against the prevailing social corruption in Palestine. “Jabrā’s novel sharply delineated the social bonds of a corrupt and parasitic landowner class that snuffed out both love and freedom. The dominant register of Jabrā’s pre-Nakba first novel is primarily and constitutively antifeudal” (Abu-Manneh 2014, p.519).

According to this research project, the aggregate number of the Palestinian novels published in the period before 1948 is 42 novels by 27 writers. After 1948, some novelists wrote about the events before 1948. In one of these, the novel Inside the Night (1992) by Ibrahim Nasrallah in English translation talks indirectly about the conflict between the peasants on one side, and the ruling class, the Turks, the British and the Jewish people from the other side. Furthermore, the translated novel As Though She Were Sleeping in (2011) by Elias Khoury goes back to a story of the Lebanese girl, Milia who challenged her religious family by marrying Mansour, a Palestinian youth, before she moved to live with him in Nazareth, Palestine before 1948.

From a statistical point of view, this study shows that about 84 % of the Palestinian novels written in Arabic after 1948 talked about the Nakba. 1% portrayed the effects of the Naksa 1967. About 5% showed the First Intifada. Nearly 1% concentrated on the lives of Palestinians during the Second Intifada. 1.5% showed life in the diaspora. 4.5% described prison life in Israel. Approximately 3% of novels exposed the social problems of Palestinian society.

B- Al-qissa al-qasira Al-Falastinya (Palestinian Short Story)

The Palestinian short stories attempt through their themes to gain international support for the Palestinian situation. The range of the Palestinian short story snowballed after the defeat of 1967 due to miscellaneous motives, such as the necessity of a new precise and concise type of literature that could portray the miserable daily life of the Palestinian people. Joint storytelling, in particular, grew because of the shortage of publishing houses in Palestine, and the individual lack of financial means with which to publish privately. This new literary method, joint storytelling, contributed to the gathering of Palestinian storytellers around collective and common themes that are included in the events of their short stories. The post-1948 short stories' main topics are refugees in the exile, the lost land, homelessness, martyrs, military siege and prison life as many Palestinian storytellers were arrested for their political attitudes and trends. On that, Tayeh (2017, para.10) adds, "the Palestinian shared storytelling expressed the map of the Palestinian short story, and showed the interaction of the visual and nonvisual reality of the acts of the occupation on the land" (my translation from Arabic).

In the same background, the spatiotemporal aspect influenced the Palestinian short story. From the spatial angle, the Palestinian short stories were not written in one geographical area, but in different areas in the world. The Palestinian short story writers were also dispersed in different areas due to the political circumstances. Henceforth, we say the Palestinian short stories produced in Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, or the 1948 lands.

For the temporal dimension, the topics, which the Palestinian short story touched on, vary with progress of time; owing to the events that took place in the 20th and 21st century, starting with the British mandate and moving through the previously mentioned calamities caused by Israel. Starting two decades before the Nakba, some short story collections appeared to rebel against the British rule and the pervasive social conventions in Palestinian society. The most well-known creative storytellers who depicted the Palestinian situation in the pre-Nakba era, are Khalil Baidus, the writer of Masāriḥ al-adhhān (Theatres of Minds) published in 1924; Mahmoud Seifeddin al-Irani, the writer of Awwalu al-shawt (The Start of the Course) in 1937; Abdulhamid Yasin, the writer of Aqaasiis (Tales) published in 1946; Najātī Ṣidqī, the writer of Al-Akhawāt al-ḥazīnāt (The Sad Sisters) published in 1947, and Al-shoyou'e al-mallionare (The Millionaire Communist); Aḥmad Shākir Karmī, the writer of Al Karmiat published in 1921, in addition to Yohana Descartes, Mohamed Darwaza, Abdallah Mukhlis, Issa al-Bunduk. Following that, Elmessiri (1996, p.2) says, “there was a radical change after 1948, due to the disruption and dislocation that Palestinian society [abysmally] experienced. A new situation had arisen, therefore new themes were dealt with and an almost entirely new sensibility developed. Post-1948 stories expressed frustrations of the people, their nostalgia for their lost homeland.”

Generally, the Palestinian short stories that tell anew the story of oppressed Palestinians under occupation and in exile had arisen in 1967 and later. The Palestinian short stories also borrowed their titles from daily life, as a way to raise the awareness of Palestinians of their problems and to motivate other readers to read and understand the implied message behind the factual content.

According to the book The Palestinian Short Story-its Birth and Evlovement 1924-1990 (2001) by the Palestinian novelist and writer Yassin El Fauor, the Palestinian short story had had three stages of development. The phase of labor and birth is from 1924 to 1948. On this, Elmessiri (1996, p.2) affirms, “it could be argued that the 1920s witnessed the birth of the Palestinian short stories.” The second phase is establishment and formation; this is the stage of the romantic short story 1948-1967. The third and last one is the stage from 1967 onwards; through which the short story was characterized by current realism. On the one side, the total number of the short story collections recorded by El Fauori’s book “within the three stages (1924-1990) was 395, by 299 storytellers” (see Ismail, 2017; Anabtawi, 2015) (my translation from Arabic). On the other side, according to Jarrar (2009, p.6) et al., “the produced short story manuscripts in the 1990s in Palestine and Jordan as well were 250 by a hundred storytellers” (my translation from Arabic). This research, however, maintains that the number of the Palestinian short story collections since 1948 until the writing of this dissertation is about 1123.

As each Palestinian short story collection includes many stories of different themes, it is inaccurate to say that a certain short story collection is about the Nakba, the Naksa or other political watersheds. Rather, each short story collection encompasses different topics relevant to the sociopolitical turning points in the lives of Palestinians. For the Palestinian short stories in Arabic and in English-language translation, the reader can notice some scenes from the Nakba, the Naksa, the First Intifada and Second Intifada. For example, Palestine’s Children by Ghassan Kanafani in 1978 includes six short stories that describe the miserable life in the Palestinian refugee camps through the eyes of children who grew up there prematurely. In the same time, the 2011 short story collection in English-language translation Father and Son by Muḥammad Sa‘īd includes a symbolic story that is in fact an allegory per se. For instance, Hekayat Aljeeran (The Story of the Neighbors) relates the tale of a pious man who came to a village to take a piece of land where he could live on. Nobody there knew how he had seized the land. But this religious man knew everything about the land, except the borders. The story is an allegory of the Israeli occupation of Palestine in 1948. In her translated short story collection into English Man and His Alarm Clock (2015), Samīrah ‘Azzām touches upon social problems, like poverty, moral decay and materialism. For example, in the short story Because we love them ‘Azzām denounces the behaviours of a poor refugee who started to steal the goods of others. The short story Palestinian is another short story that talks about another refugee called Abu Saleh who became stateless after 1948, and who seeks Lebanese Citizenship.

Regarding the First Intifada, the short story collection Nothing but the Shadow and Other Short Stories (2018) by the storyteller Rajab Abū Sarīyah in English translation focuses on the events of that period. In more details, the story Broshilo...Broshilo talks about the asymmetry of power between Palestinians and Israeli soldiers. This story depicts the confrontation between an Israeli sniper and a young Palestinian man who used a slingshot to throw stones at the soldiers. The sniper killed the young man. In return, his friend injured the soldier’s male organ with a stone. The writer of this story tries to say that the First Intifada undeterred some plans of Israel. Back to the collection Father and Son (2011), it has some short stories, like Father and Son that solely concern the events of the First Intifada in 1987.

The most famous short story collections in English translation on the Second Intifada are The Book of Gaza: a City in Short Fiction (2014) edited by Atef Abu Sayf and Mordechai's Moustache and his Wife's Cats (2017) by Maḥmūd Shuqayr. The first collection talks about the suffering of the people who live in Gaza caused to killings, and poor living conditions that followed the Second Intifada. The second collection portrays the reality of Palestinians being hindered by in their daily lives. The main fictional character in this collection is Mordechai, an Israeli reservist who is always busy with his moustache. He would have served at Qalandiya checkpoint between Ramallah and Jerusalem. As long as he was engrossed by his moustache, movement through the checkpoint ground to a halt. I have only herein mentioned some of the Palestinian short story collections that are available in English. However, there are hundreds of Palestinian short story collections in Arabic that talk about the four main watersheds in the life of Palestinians.

C- Al-shier Al-Falastini (Palestinian Poetry)

Palestinian poetry as a form of literature appears mainly as defensive device for Palestinians who became homeless, landless, paupers and immigrants after 1948. This year was not the first advent of Palestinian poetry; it had however, roots that go back a century ago. Thus, we find poetic manuscripts written during the Ottoman Empire. For instance, ‘Abd al-Raḥmān ibn Ibrāhīm Maqdisī, who was born in Safad, wrote two poetry manuscripts in the 14th century. Two centuries later, the Ottomans defeated the Mamluks in the Battle of Marj

Dābiq in 1516, and conquered Palestine. The Ottoman conquest and other subsequent measures prompted [Palestinian] poets to write against the Ottomans. Hence, Kāmil ibn Ḥusayn Ghazzī from Gaza, Yūsuf ibn Ismā‘īl Nabhānī from Haifa, Saīd Al-Karmi from Tulkarm, Ali al-Rimawi from Jerusalem; ‘Umar Yāfī from Jafa, Sa‘īd Karmī from Tulkarm, ‘Ali al-Ahmad from Tiberias, and others composed poetic manuscripts, so that they could describe social life under the Ottoman regime. Thereon, Khalil (2004) affirms, “Palestinian literary reality in that time was an inevitable and natural result excreted from the tyrant Ottoman regime” (my translation from Arabic). Following this phase, many Palestinian poets appeared during the British mandate between 1922 and 1947. Thus, "the Nakba was not the only reason to draw the attention of poets towards Palestine; many attempts predated the year of 1948 to react to the attempts of Israel to annex Jerusalem and expel its inhabitants, especially after the Balfour declaration in 1917, and the null partition plan in 1947" (Mustafa 2008, para3; Al_Ghalayneh 2010, para.4) (my translation from Arabic). The poets who invigorated the poetry of this period are Qayṣar Salīm Khūrī, Kamāl Najmī, Muṭlaq ‘Abd al-Khāliq Yazbak, Muḥammad Tamīmī, Ibrahim Touqan, Muḥammad Is‘āf al-Nashāshībī, Būluṣ Shihadeh, Iskandar Khūrī, Salīm Abu Eliqbal al Yaqubi, Ibrāhīm Dabbāgh, Abdul Rahim Mahmoud, Fadwa Tuqan, Sa‘īd Karmī, Abd al-Kareem al-karmi, Jamīl Baḥrī, ‘Īsā as-Safrī, Hadīyah ‘Abd al-Hādī, Ḥasan Buḥayrī, ‘Īsā Dawood, Fā’iq Farīd ‘Anabtāwī; Faraḥān Salām, Nūḥ Ibrāhīm, Nāṣir Jirjis‘Īsā, Shukrī Sha‘shā‘ah, and others. The years of 1948 and 1967 were the fundamental incentive for developing new and innovative topics in Palestinian poetry that ranged between sentiments of loss and the calling of Palestinians and the Arabs to defend Palestine and the holy archeological sites in it.

Palestinian poems are the most favorite forms of literature due to their condense length, precision and concision. Poetry is the traditionally favored form of literature in Arabic. It still maintains its significant position by virtue of the sociopolitical and religious subjects included in it. This holds true for literature from and about Palestine. Palestinian poetry describes thoroughly the Palestinian situation (see End, 1997; Jayyusi, 1992; Abu-Manneh, 2016). Palestinian poetry, as a branch of general literature and due to the varied events that have been going on for more than 70 years, acquired diverse appellations. Thus, there exist the Nakba poetry, the Naksa poetry, and the Intifada poetry. According to the statistics this research conducted, the number of collections of poetry from 1948 to the present day is about 2600 manuscripts.

On the one hand, as with short story collections, some books of poetry include poems whose themes vary according to the political events of the day. In other words, this research finds out that the topics included in some poetry collection are not the same. For example, in his translated collection of poems, titled In Al- Quds (2017), Tamim Al-Barghouti talks about different events. Included in the anthology is the poem Almaut Feena Wa Feehem Alfaza (The Death Inside Us and Fear Inside Them), which talks about the devastation caused by Israeli combat aircraft in Gaza. While the poem Khat A’la Alqabr Almu’aqat (A Line at the Permanent Tomb) talks about the Israeli siege of the of President Yasser Arafat’s headquarters in the city of Ramallah between 2002 and 2004. Nothing More to Lose talks about two grandmothers. One of them died unable to bear witness to the First Intifada, and the other died of lung failure upon the Second Intifada subsidence.

On the other hand, some other collections include poems that carry the same message. For example, A Lover from Palestine and Other Poems (1970) and Why did You Leave the Horse Alone? (2006) by Mahmoud Darwish in English-language translation are about the exile after 1948. The bilingual poetry collection Haifa and other Poems (2015) by Samīḥ Mas‘ūd talks about Haifa, the city which from the poet’s family has been expelled. Aghānī al-Durūb (1969) by Samih Al-Qasim includes poems of remembrance of the past. In addition to other volumes of poetry that talk about the Nakba and the land in English translation, like Unfortunately, It Was Paradise (2003) by Mahmoud Darwish and The Dead Sea Narratives (2013) by Ezz idden Al Manasrah, to name but a few.

The experience of detention moved Palestinian prisoners to transfer their lives in cells to paper and describe their endurance of the cruelty inflicted by their jailor. This research finds out that those prisoners wrote more than 33 collections of poems, in addition to the joint manuscript Abjadyat al-Qayed al-Akheer (The Alphabet of the Last Fetter) in 2014 in Arabic.

In the Arab World in general, poets from different countries composed poems the core themes of which concern the Palestinian issue, the holy places, encouraging the Arabs to help Palestinians and their lands. In this field, we find Fuad Sammah, the Jordanian poet Jameel Allush, the Iraqi Poets Abd-Al-Wahab Albayati and Abd Al-Wahab Al-Ghareezi, the Yamani Ahmad Al-Shami, the Syrian Suleiman Al-Isa, the Egyptian Ali Mahmoud Taha, the Libyan Mohammad Al-Shalamani, the Algerian Ahmad Sahnoon, and others. For this, Shamasneh, the Palestinian poet, launched a poem called The Poet in 2015 to show the contribution of the poet and poetry to humanity. He wrote,

“The Poet
Youth has emerged
Do not let your life
pass in vain
Awaken the star
from its slumber
Let the universe
sing in delight
Chant your magic songs
for the world
so that fear may die
in the hearts

of antelopes
Yours is eternal glory
Forever spreading the love
it has been gifted with”

D- Al-masrah AL-Falastini (Palestinian Drama)

Drama, the specific mode of fiction presented in theater performance, contributed to the awareness of Palestinian sociopolitical issues as well. Drama conveys an accurate image of the Palestinian society on the stage. The first group of the Palestinian plays was written and acted by playwrights and actors continuing to live in Palestine. This research finds that the number of plays printed after 1948 is about 423. The Palestinian plays normally embark on studies of the lives of Palestinians under the siege of Israel. For example, the book of plays 603 (2017) by Imad Farajin in English translation focuses on the lives of Palestinian prisoners. It concerns four Palestinian men who share a very cramped cell and pass their spells of incarceration listening to the buses outside, asking themselves whether the next bus will be the one to take them home. The play of the same title encapsulates the miserable life of the prisoners in an Israeli prison. It also touches upon their dreams and aspirations. In his 1995 drama collection Al-Majnoon Walbahar (The Crazy Person and the Sea), which Mohammad Dali translated into English in 2009, Wahīb Wahbah dramatizes the Arabic poem. The themes of his plays vary between love, the search for the good life, murder of woman and other themes. In addition, Azzarub (The Long Narrow lane) in 2006 in Arabic by Samia Qazmoz is the story of the city Acre. It is also the story of the people who left Acre by force, and the people who remained there. In this play, Acre is the all cities and the woman is the all women. That is, for the writer, Acre, the Palestinian city, is the dearest city ever, and the woman of Acre is the representative of all Palestinian women. The woman describes the neighborhoods, the traditions, the joys and sorrows of the city. In the same thematic area, The play Taha (2017) by Amer Hlehel in English translation tells the story of the late Palestinian poet Muḥammad ‘Alī Ṭāhā whose story is representative of other Palestinians’ stories.

2.3.2.2 Palestinian literary nonfiction

A- Al-sira al-thatia (Autobiography)

The Palestinian autobiographies thoroughly and wholeheartedly depict the life of Palestinians during the different political watersheds; since the Nakba in 1948 until the present day. In this regard, Jayussi (1992, p.93) affirms,

“the Palestinian art of personal diaries [autobiographies or accounts] was perhaps the most accurate and eloquent witness to the epochs of the catastrophes. It meant to clutch to the identity within the anarchy of collective tragedy.” This research finds that the number of autobiographies over the last seventy years is about 81. The most well-known Palestinian autobiographies that portray the toughness of Palestinian life in exile are The First Well (1995) and Princesses Street: Baghdad Memories (2005) by Jabrā Ibrāhīm Jabrā in English translation.

The First Well, which was firstly published in Arabic in 1992, is a childhood book through which Jabrā relives his past between the lines of his autobiography. He also concentrates on his birthplace Bethlehem to say that his harsh past was the reason for his successful literary and scientific life. Princesses Street: Baghdad Memories, which was firstly published in Arabic in 1994, talks about the two years that Jabrā spent in Baghdad in the 1950s. This second autobiography is considered by literary scholars and readers complementary to his first one.

A memoir is a form of literature that belongs to autobiographies. A memoir is a collection of memories and reminiscences written about the events, either private or public, that took place in its writer’s life. In other words, a memoir is a narration of one’s life in one’s own terms. Palestinian memoirists wrote in order to draw attention to the details of their lives under Israeli ascendancy, or to recall their lives under the past Arab rule. In fact, the aftermath of 1948 was not the only incentive that urged the Palestinian memoirists to write. The years before 1948 were also full of watersheds in Palestinians’ lives and these were also recalled by the memoirists. As an example, Shukrī Sha‘shā‘ah wrote a book of memoirs in Arabic, titled Dhikrayāt (Memoirs) in the year of 1946. Palestinian memoirs published since the Nakba number about 76. In the translated memoir Descent into the water: Palestinian Notes from Arab Exile (1980) by Muin Bseiso, he describes his life in an Israeli prison. He also shows his life in Egypt. It also touches upon his family and comrades in the Communist Party. A Memory of Forgetfulness (1995) by Mahmoud Darwish talks about the Siege of Beirut that took place in the summer of 1982. This siege ended with Palestinian Liberation Organization being forced out of Beirut and Lebanon.

B- Al-sīra Al-Falastinia (The Palestinian Biography)

As a story of a someone’s life written by another author, this study finds that Palestinian biographies written since the Nakba until the present day number 49. The most well-known Palestinian biographies are Achievements (n.d.) in Arabic by anonymous writer and The World of Rashid Hussein, a Palestinian Poet in Exile (1979) in English by Kamal Ballouta. The first biography studies the live of the Palestinian journalist Mohamed Ali Altaher, who stood against the establishment the Jewish State in Palestine. The second biography talks about Rashid Hussein as one of the most promising and prominent Palestinian poets to appear on the Israeli Arab stage. This biography describes the life of Rashed Hussein in France, USA and Syria.

C- Palestinian Testimonial Narratives

Testimonial narrative is a genuine narrative recited by a witness who narrates the events or happenings as he/she already saw. Palestinian narrators adopt testimonial literature to show the world the realistic images of Palestinians' lives. The narrator also depicts thoroughly his or her experience within special periods of their sociopolitical turmoil. The testimonial Palestinian literature portrays the lives of Palestinian, either under the ascendancy of Israel, or under the Arab countries' regimes. From 1948 to the present day, the aggregate number of Palestinian testimonials inside and outside Palestine is approximately 41.

D- Palestinian Prose Text Books

Palestinian prose texts are a form of language that exhibit a simple flow of speech that contributes to the publicity of the Palestinian question. The Palestinian writers resorted to writing texts that are neither novels, nor shorts stories, biographies, autobiographies or even plays to display their issue through a different form of literature. This research affirms that prose texts emerged before the year of 1948. The total number of volumes of texts written by Palestinian writers after 1948 is approximately 186.

Few prose texts or volumes of prose have been translated into English language. But according to the digital database of this research project, those that have been translated are Hikayat as-Samu (The Tales of As-Samu), which was published in Arabic in 1999 by Mūsā Ḥawāmidah, and In the Presence of Absence (2011) by Mahmoud Darwish in English translation. In his book, Mūsā Ḥawāmidah remembers his hometown as-Samu. He recites the minute details relevant to his birthplace, against which Israel launched a full-scale military operation in 1966. Mahmoud Darwish touches upon different topics in his last book. Some of them are based on his past memories. Some other talk about his present days and the future. He talks also about himself as the world-weary Palestinian who knew exile through living and his homeland through writing. Other volumes of prose texts that were not translated into English language focus on the themes pertinent to the Nakba, the Naksa, love and other social problems related to injustice against women.

Generally speaking, modern Palestinian literature tries by and large to present and convey to the Arab World a full and sincere picture of the Palestinian people in Palestine or in exile. Palestinian intellectuals made their best efforts to introduce their question to the others. Based on the significance of modern Palestinian literature, it should not to remain dormant and esoteric; it must be cosmopolitan, especially that thousands of Arabic literary works were published by Palestinian writers from 1948 to the present day as Appendix (2), titled Numbers of Palestinian Literary Works in Arabic between 1948-2019 at the end of thesis, shows. Thus, this research deems translation of Palestinian authors into English language the most competent method to let a larger public know what Palestinian Identity is.

Chapter 3: Translation as Advocacy

3.1 Translation in general (brief definitions and adverse effects)

In this brief subdivision, I will not only embark upon the meaning of translation and the roles translation play to the backing up of some issues, but I will attempt also to go further. I will briefly delineate some cases from modern history that show how mistranslations might have an adverse effect on the fates of peoples amongst other things suffer through unresolvable conflicts, long-term disputes and having the mantle of victimhood thrust upon them. As a rule of thumb, translation as a process and a result is known by both intellectuals and laymen as the conveying of verbal expression from one language into another. That is to say, whenever and wherever you ask whomever you want about the meaning of translation, they would answer without any reluctance that it is the transference of words and ideas from a source text into a target text. More broadly, Ramadan (2016, p.18) adds, “Nida in 1964 et.al define translation as the process of transferring into the target language the source language meaning and style; the semantic and stylistic equivalences.” Moreover, Lefevere (2003, p.2) clarifies “translation is a channel opened, often not without a certain reluctance, through which foreign influences can penetrate the native culture, challenge it, and even contribute to subverting it.”

Miscellaneous definitions of the translation process are entirely concomitant with other internal and external regards. That is, the task of translation is to go through the source text, and proceed through a complex decision-making process affected by socio-cultural, material, textual and psychological considerations (see Bassnett and Trivedi, 2002; Chesterman, 1998; Darwish, 2010; House, 2001). The translation process is not as simple as people think, as shown in the previous definitions. Translation is truly decisive, and it might end up with unfortunate results, dire and destructive consequences. In other words, “translations can be [also] potentially threatening precisely because they confront the receiving culture with another, different way of looking at life and society, a way that can be seen as potentially subversive” (Lefevere 2003, p.14).

In modern history in particular, the mistranslation of bilateral resolutions between different states in the world has caused wars that left thousands dead and seemingly intractable conflicts that resulted in the loss of the people’s rights. For instance, in the year of 1945, “the Japanese president’s utterance of the word ‘Mokosatsue’, which was mistranslated as meaning ignorance or rejection, instead of ‘no comment’, led to the killing of more than 150,000 people” (Freeland, 2018). In another case, the terms of the United Nations Security Resolution 242, ‘withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from (the) territories occupied in the recent conflict’ concerning the lands in the aftermath of the Six Day War 1967 was misconceived. The Arab countries clutched to the French Resolution which includes the definite article [the] before the word [territories], while Israel banked on the English one which excludes the. The misunderstanding on the subject matter led to the mistranslation of the term and caused the loss of most of the parts of the West Bank, and the waging of a lasting dispute between the Israeli government and Palestine.

Recently, the Arabic mistranslation of the word research in the CNN scoop “White House lawyers research impeachment”, concerning the possible removal of Donald Trump from office by the legal means of impeachment led to confusion in the news and caused media hype. The word research was translated as look for, while the more accurate translation of the word is to study or to investigate. That is, the verb look for in this context is certain. While the verb to study is less certain, recognizing it may be incorrect. Mistranslation can also lead to economic disaster. For example, “the 1987 mistranslation of a technical and constructional term led to a waste of millions of dollars of the Kuwaiti treasury” (Kamal, 2018). Thus, mistranslation is the process of transferring a marred, distorted or unintended meaning from the source language into the target language, with grave possible consequences such as misunderstandings, diplomatic incidents and long-term conflicts between states. On the other hand, good translation is the transfer of the ideas and thoughts included in pieces of prose or verse from a language into another, taking into consideration levels higher than that of the mere words of the source text, such as semantics, rhetorical, syntactic, logical, pragmatic and morphological levels. To put it briefly, translation can be a double-edged sword; it can be destructive in cases in which we deal with it as a random process, deliberate manipulations designed to exacerbate conflicts and then legitimize the use of force, and an arbitrary cognitive activity as in the aforementioned examples, or a constructive, systematic and advocating process as we will see in the next subdivision.

3.2 Translation as advocacy

The process of translation has bad results that the section above casts light on. However, translation can also have positive or productive outcomes. This part of the study provides insights into some arguments that see translation from constructive standpoints and explore new perspectives on translation in relation to rescuing the source texts from loss of meaning, redefining and challenging despotism, rebelling against political oppression, castigating perpetrators of social injustice, and aiding the explication of issues that arise in lands with different languages. Translation thus does not occur in a vacuum, but can be charged with multiple purposes and significances to serve certain matters within a certain period of time in a definite area. On that topic, Darwish (2010, p.27) confirms, “a piece of translation comes into existence as a response to a situation that demands translation mediation.” Analogously, Bassnett and Trivedi (2002, p.2) add, “translation does not happen in a vacuum, but in a continuum; it is not an isolated act, it is part of an ongoing process of intercultural transfer.” For the present project, translation as advocacy belongs mainly to the field of translation as an intentional act; to the intentionality of expressive communication in which, Darwish (2010, p.33) explains, “we might express out emotions, or feelings of pleasure, pains, excitement of shock to someone else in messages that express such emotional and motivational states.” Translation, from a comparable perspective, is a good source of understanding between societies that have scant information about each other. It thus pushes both societies towards mutual understanding and cognition of other’s respective political, cultural, religious and social life. Mez’el (2014, n.p.) relates that, “translation by itself is an action of connection, and a mutual understanding between different readers” (my translation from Arabic).

One of the primary missions of translation is to advocate for the source text. Translation protects the source language from loss, extinction and ignorance. The illustrative example that shows the contribution of translation to the underpinning of a certain text in a specific language, is the Old and New Testament. In more detail, “one of the most revolutionary events in the history of English style has been the authorized translation of the Bible, ... the recovery of the original spirit of Christianity was thus sought by Protestant England through an act of translation” (Bassnett & Trivedi 2002, p.182). In fact, some chapters of the new and old testament were originally written in Aramaic, which really was a combination of Hebrew, the language of Jewish society, and Akkadian, which the Babylonians spoke. A small minority now speaks Aramaic. Thereby, this fate would have certainly been the same for these religious books if translation had not brought them to a broader audience. Another work which translation really rescued was the 4th century Sanskrit collection of fables Calila e Dimna, whose the original text, in addition to the Persian translation were lost, but fortunately and due to the existence of the text in English and Arabic, this collection still exists until the present day, and it makes sense politically. Thus, “the original text would achieve its life in the languages that it was translated into. Bhagavad-gita [a 700-verse Sanskrit scripture] augurs to circulate and survive rather better in English translation than in the original language – perhaps even within India in the decades to come” (Ghawadra, 2007; Bassnett and Trivedi, 2002). The case is also the same for the texts of minorities, such as those of the Naxi Dongaba in China. The Chinese government and translators made painstaking efforts to preserve these endangered texts through translation. Comparably, translation draws attention to ignored languages, whose lot in the literary world to be ignored. In this regard, “Ramanujan work focuses on the underrepresented language-combination of English, Kannada and Tamil, his work enlarges the combination to include Indian languages like Telugu, Malayalam and Marathi that continue to be marginalized” (Bassnett and Trivedi 2002, p.114).

The translations of diverse literary categories into other languages present to the world proof of the existence and persistence of such literary forms. Bassnett and Trivedi (2002, p.11) confirm, “...accounts for the translation boom currently on in India in which any number of Indians have taken it upon themselves to translate works of Indian literature [for instance] into English, to show the world (including Anglophone Indians) that such works do exist.” In the same track, a direct translation of a certain source text can be seen as resistance and a valiant stand in the face of the dominant colonial translational intervention. One example, which affirms such an idea, is the direct translation of Persian texts into Hindi during the British colonization of India. In this, “the Hindi translations undertaken from Persian can be seen as a resolute act of resistance to the English intervention” (Bassnett and Trivedi 2002, p.8).

Translation is also deemed a significant indicator to evaluate some language which other languages are translated into. Thus, the age of the language or the number of speakers is not the fundamental guiding parameter of a language’s progress towards universality. Rather, the contacts and ties with other languages to benefit from their innovative vocabularies. Indeed, Al_Khwaildi (2016) has gone as far as to say, “the international language is not the one which is spoken by a larger number, but the one to which different works are translated” (my translation from Arabic). At the same time, translation can also innovate new literary works in specific areas, whether close or remote. That is, translation from one language into another helps the writers and literati think about the styles, mechanisms, and contents adopted in the translated source language text, so they could use the same in their writings. Lefevere (2003, p.xi-8) affirms, “rewriting’s positive aspect can help in the evolution of a literature and a society. It can introduce new concepts, new genres, new devices, and the history of translation is the history of literary innovation. Translations have been made with the intention of influencing the development of a literature.” For instance, Indian languages launched their literary innovations and traditions via translations from other languages. Bassnett and Trivedi (2002, p.164) comment, “most Indian languages initiated their respective literary traditions through translations either from Sanskrit or from other Indian languages.” To add, translation from and into English was also the cornerstone in the building up of contemporary Indian literature. In an identical manner, the Palestinian writer derived the form and the content of the short story from the European translated short stories. In this field, Anabtawi (2015, para.3) says that “the Palestinian short stories grew up from the direct contact with the emerging bourgeoisie that interacted with the cultural movement that came from Europe in the 19th century” (my translation from Arabic). Consequently, some critics of translational acts esteem and evaluate translation in view of its participation in intercultural interactions and ties, the preservation of the source text, and the paying of attention to marginalized and forgotten texts.

The other task of translation centres on fields pertinent to political matters in certain nations. It attempts to internationalize the texts that encompass intricate political themes in a specific zone. On this subject, Mez’el (2014, n.p.) says, “there is no doubt that translation is a political and cultural agent which gives the reader the chance to know profoundly the other’s point of view” (my translation from Arabic). If we go back to the 19th century, we thus find that the Egyptian translations of European texts prioritized topics relevant to democracy; reflecting hopes for the adoption of such a fair system in the Orient. Consequently, it could be had the potential to aid the struggle against despotism, dictatorship, and oppression. Translation is depicted as a one-way process in the era of the European colonization. On that, Bassnett and Trivedi (2002, p.5) comment, “the close relationship between colonization and translation has come under scrutiny; we can perceive the extent to which translation was for centuries a one-way process, rather than as part of a reciprocal process of exchange.” Alternatively, translation per se could be a reciprocal relation between asymmetrical powers and positions. In this respect, Robinson (2003, p.3) and Sayaaheen (2015, p.191) assert, “translation is steeped in power relations, between colonizers and colonized, academics and professionals. What next?” Regarding this quotation, it brings us back to the translation of the book of Calila e Dimna. The ancient Indian philosopher and scholar Vishnu Sharma “Pedipa” in about 300 BCE wrote this collection of fables, as we have seen, in Sanskrit to persuade the ruler of India Depshelim to stop his injustice. The Sanskrit title Panchatantra was translated into Persian by the Persian physician Borzuya. 'Abd Allah Ibn al-Muqaffa, the Persian translator and literary scholar, translated it into Arabic in the 8th century “for political guidance, moral advice, social reform” (Ahmad, 2009, para,5) (my translation from Arabic).

Some theorists believe that translation from and into the colonizers’ overriding language should be curtailed because it keeps colonization and occupation in existence, as Bassnett and Trivedi (2002, p.5), comment “there are those who maintain that translation into European languages should be restricted, that texts should not be translated into dominant linguistic and cultural systems as this perpetuates the colonizing process.” On the other hand, this research suggests that translation from and into the language of the colonizer might enable the colonized to understand the mindsets and the ideological background of the colonizer.

In this area, for a long time non translation from Hebrew, which is the language of the colonizer of Palestine, was the norm. This stance was based on the idea of boycotting everything related to the Zionist state. In the last few decades however, there has been a surge in translation from Hebrew, with particular focus on (a) works that explain the nature of Zionist thinking and institutions; (b) works that lay bare the fragility of the Zionist enterprise in Palestine; and (c) works that offer a critical perspective on Israeli practices against Palestinians (Alhirthani 2017, p.136).

In addition, translation of political literary works might incite the empathy and propel the feelings of the colonizer towards the colonized, it even might deter him from perpetrating further atrocities against weaker rivals. Mez’el (2014, n.p.) affirms, “the Israeli Ben-Ezer says that he feels sympathetic towards the characters in Men in the Sun [by Ghassan Kanafani in 1999 in English language translation], and that if the Israeli politicians read Death in Beirut [by Tawfig Awwadin in 1984 in English-language translation], they would not attack Beirut” (my translation from Arabic). On this subject, the Israeli researcher and translator Amit-Kochvi divulged her compassion towards the suffering of Palestinians after translating Darwish’s poem The Two Parts of the Orange, and expressed that the pain of the other is not less than the pain of the self. Correspondingly, translation is an ideal strategy for the furthering of the aims of sociopolitical redress and ideological reform. Translation also aids the presentation of the aspirations, dreams and wishes of a given oppressed peoples to their oppressors. As a result, translation in general could be a give-and-take rapport between the colonizer and the colonized with respect to a specific question, as Robinson stated previously. Mez’el (2014, n.p.) also adds, “the translations were meant to introduce the Hebrew reader to the Palestinian feels, thinks and dreams of, through Palestinian eyes, thus making the Israeli readers discover themselves and the other. Discovering one's self leads in many times to reawaken one's conscience. Then this individual awareness would become a collective awareness" (my translation from Arabic).

Therefore, Anton Shammas, Israeli-Arab writer, poet and translator, valued the translation of the Palestinian literary works in Hebrew, as it is a way to publicize the Palestinian issue within the Israeli inhabitants. Shammas therefore translated into Hebrew some works of the Palestinian novelist and writers including, Emile Habibi and Mohammad Ali Taha. Moreover, some other literary works by Mahmoud Darwish, Samih al-Qasim, Šauqīya Arūq, Ala' Hlehel, and others have been transformed into Hebrew. Translation from Arabic into Hebrew is almost not existing. In fact, this translation weakness is attributed to an Arabs lack of awareness of the importance of translation, the underestimating of the Arab literary works from Palestine by Israeli literary associations, and the lack of interest the wider Israeli readership has in Arab literature. For example, "statistics show that [only] 10 Arabic books were translated into Hebrew between 2012 and 2013. While between 2012 and 2016, the translated books did not exceed 10" (Shalhat, 2017; Al-shareef, 2017) (my translation from Arabic). Among these translated works are the works of the Lebanese novelist Elias Khoury.

As a relevant example, much translational work of modern Palestinian literature into English is concentrated primarily on topics that belong to exile, diaspora, depression, immigration and the worries of day to day life under an oppressive regime, in addition to the implied call for an external, immediate and just intervention. By the same token, "the Israeli researcher Amit-Kochavi affirms that the bulk of Palestinian literature in Hebrew translation is political, social and critical of Israel" (Mez'el 2014, n.p.) (my translation from Arabic). Through translations of some Palestinian literary works into English or vice versa, it is manifestly lucid that Robinson's previously mentioned quotation could not be applicable only to ancient literary works like Calila e Dimna, but to modern literature as well. For instance, the translation of Ghassan Kanafani's novel Returning to Haifa (1974) by Karen Riley and Barbara Harlow included a great confrontation between the colonizer and the colonized, "as the main concern of this novel is the story of Palestinian family that came back to Haifa to see their old home occupied by the widowed Miriam who fled from Poland after her father was sent to Auschwitz and who adopted the couple's son and brought him up as a naturalised Israeli" (Billington 2018, para.2). Similarly, the English-language Palestinian novel Mornings in Jenin (2006) by the Palestinian-American writer Suzan Abulhawa and its Arabic translation also show the confrontation between different characters of the conflict. In other words, by the end of the novel, readers can see that Amal, the Palestinian girl met with her brother Ismael, who has been stolen as a gift for a wife of an Israeli soldier.

At the present time, and due to the one-sided media portrayals of certain societies or specific issues, the revitalization of translation movement from Arabic into English, in particular, is of utmost importance. It is a direct and authentic mediator of connection between Eastern writers and Western readers or spectators. The Palestinian novelist Ibrahim Nassrallah wrote Less than an Enemy, More than a Friend (2010), in which the narrative traces a line from the refugee camps to the corners of the earth. Nassrallah's experience with European audiences inspired this 2010 book. That is to say that the Western public was really influenced more strongly by his poems than the Arabs. He emphasizes the moment of convergence between the Arabic text and Western audience's sympathy. In fact, this reminds me of dynamic equivalence of translation, which House (2001, p. 244) defines "that the manner in which the receptors react to the translation should be equivalent to the manner in which the receptors respond to the original." In other words, since Nasrallah's translated texts rely wholly on every-day experience and emotions, they [Western audience], who might not have known anything about Palestine, got engaged in texts the same or even more than of the source text readers. Likewise, the translation of the Palestinian play Taha by the Palestinian playwright Amer Hlehel left the same impression in the hearts of the Arabic and English audiences.

Surprisingly, the feeling is the same in both productions. I thought that the English would feel different; I thought it would be a more intellectual experience for the audience, and it would lack the emotion that the Arabic production brings to life. But I was wrong. In the English version, people have also engaged with the emotion and the heart of the story, even if some of them didn't know anything about Palestine and the history before they came to the performance. It seems we speak different languages but we experience life in the same way (Hlehel, 2017).

With this in mind along with Skopos' theory of translation, the target text gains the trust and the backing of the readers as long as a translation depends on knowledge, norms, expectations of the target readers. It also hinges on whether translation really fulfills its purposes and functions, in addition to the literary reputation of the writer and the translator as well. Bassnett and Trivedi (2002, p.29) comment that, "in translations the greater the prestige of the source culture and text, the easier it is to require that the audience come to the text. ...the greater the reputation of an author, the greater the demands that can be placed upon an international audience." Thus, translation is still a way to introduce the issues of specific individuals to the others, instead of keeping them monopolized and restricted to a small number of people. Al-Edresse (2017, para.3) says, "translation has been adopted since ages to contradict the Greek wisdom Know Yourself by Yourself" (my translation from Arabic). Translation is as essential as the process of writing in the source text; Taha Hussein, a great Egyptian critic, writer and novelist affirms that the process of translation is not less important than the process of writing.

Proceeding from the principle that most of the social problems in a society are doubtlessly the results of the political tensions of that society, translation arises to be against the obsolete customs and social ruthless habits, like, oppression of women. In this area, Tymoczko (2014, p.170) confirms, "translation always carries with it the capacity to challenge what is socially established, to expand or overturn what is known, and to foster rebellion against ideological and political standards." The translators hence try mostly to make such issues known by a larger audience. For the issue of women's rights, a small number of Arabic novels or short stories tackling mainly with female injustice were translated into English, though translation is the most faithful passage via which such a sensitive issue is transformed to a greater public. The Arabic female literary works largely depict the image of the woman in the orient, either because of the political situation, or to stand against the unjust traditions. The contributions of translations to the social problems, especially feminist issues, are manifest through the translating of the most renowned Arabic novels, like; The open door (1960) by Latīfah Zayyāt, which was translated in by Marilyn Booth in 2002; Woman at Point Zero (1975) by the Egyptian novelist Nawal Al-Saadawi, which was translated by Sherif Hetata in 2007, The Loved Ones (2003) by Āliyah Mamdūh, which was translated by Marilyn Booth in 2006, Maryam: Keeper of Stories (2007) by Alawīyah Şubh, which was translated by Nirvana Tanoukhi in 2016, The Bridges of Constantine (1993) by Ahlam Mostaghanmi, which was translated by Raphael Cohen in 2013. It is clear that some translators paid attention to female literary works. Although dozens of female writers have recently devoted their lives to the narration of these issues, like Nahla Karam, Huwaida Saleh, Taghreed Ihsan, Muna Al-Brinse, Saheer Al-Musadafa, Nawal Al-Sa'adawi, Amal Jarrah, Salwa Al-Nu'aymi, Ḥuzāmah Ḥabāyib, Fadila Al-Farouq and others, nonetheless, I did not find any translation for the works of those novelists. The aforementioned novels are conveyed into English due to their political themes and because they are prize-winning.

Regarding the English presentations of Palestinian literary works that deal with the situation of women, it is impossible to separate the social circumstances of Palestinian women from the political status quo. The woman in Palestinian literary works, especially in novels, has always been the symbol of the land and wisdom. Ali, (2009) says, "...the Palestinian novel was interested in highlighting the image of women in multiple models, such as educated, liberal, struggler..., it was not also prohibited to take her as an icon of land and wisdom" (my translation from Arabic) Alternatively, the images of the woman in the Palestinian novel ranged between negativity and positivity. Ali (2009) confirms, "Osta sees that the writers did not show only one image of the woman, ...but they also proffered the marginalized and neglected women who find themselves working in places that some conservatives in the society did not agree with" (my translation from Arabic). The Palestinian woman was a victim due to sociopolitical practices. Thus, the English presentations as advocacy for the Palestinian woman are mentioned in detail in the section on the translation of Palestinian literature.

Suffice it to say, regardless of the shortfalls of translation, it is however still one of the best ways to protect the source text from loss, to enrich world literature with innovative styles and motifs, to create cooperation between different societies, to transfer the societies' miseries into other languages, to expose sociopolitical issues included in literature to the world. Thereupon, Lefevere (2003, p.25) adds, "whatever you may say about the deficiencies of translation, it is and remains one of the most important and dignified enterprises in the general [spiritual] commerce of the world." What is the reality of English translations in the Arab World?

3.3 Translation of Arabic Literature into English

This part of thesis focuses on the general process of translating Arabic literature into English. It highlights the history of translation from and into Arabic and sheds light on the major reasons and watersheds that draw the Western translators and readers to the Arabic literary masterpieces on the one hand. On the other hand, it discusses the main impediments to increase the Arabic titles in English language translation.

3.3.1 History and interest in translating Arabic Literature

Away from the number of the translated Arabic works into other languages, the process of translation from Arabic into other languages is not newly born, but it goes back more than a millennium. Mathieu (2016) says, “the era of the Prophet Muhammad (570-632) gave Arabic translation a big boost, as the desire to spread Islam and transmit it to communities which did not speak Arabic.” In addition, Allen (2014, p.191) confirms, “the Muslim armies’ rapid conquests [in the seventh and eighth centuries] brought Arabic into contact with those and other cultures in an entirely new and different context. “Translation from other languages into Arabic however began in earnest between the ninth and tenth centuries; during the Abbasid era. On that topic and period, Allen (2014, p.193) comments, “a number of factors combined to create such a fertile environment for intercultural exchange and thus for a major increase in translation activities.” In the same context, Mathieu (2016) affirms, “another key period for translation into Arabic was the first Abbasid period (750-1250). Caliph Al-Mansour, who built the city of Baghdad, improved translation techniques, while Caliph Al-Ma’mun opened a small translation agency: The House of Wisdom (Bait Al Hikma) was the largest translation institute of the time.”

During the first half of the nineteenth century; during Muhammad Ali Pasha’s regime, translation manifestly grew to include not only literature, but scientific works as well. “Among the most prominent translators during that time was Rifa'a al-Tahtawi, who translated many scientific books for the army's use” (El-Saba 2014, para.2). In the early twentieth century, new literary works were translated from and into Arabic by the Pen League, which was established between 1915 and 1916 and “the works of these members, like Gibran and al-Rihani, quickly spread across the Middle East. Gibran not only published works in both Arabic and English, but also self-translated some of his works, such as Sand and Foam” (El-Saba 2014, para.3).

The twentieth century saw few translations of Arabic literature into English and thus little knowledge of Arabic-language literature in the English-speaking world. Indeed,

This tendency may well skew the selection of literary works for the international audience to some extent, but for the first half of the twentieth century it almost completely prevented their translation at all. Literature was afforded, at best, a marginal status within Oriental and Middle East studies, and — as the translators of the period can testify — it was almost impossible to find a publisher willing to take on an Arabic book in translation (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.20).

Due to the lack of money and awareness, a few books were translated into English from the 1940s to 1960s of the last century; “between 1947 and 1967 there were probably only sixteen Arabic books translated into English” (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p. 20).

Years later, interest in the translation of Arabic literature did not show a clear upward trend and the main aim of translation was not the result of the interest in the cultures and literary life of the Arabs, but rather, to understand the course of sociopolitical events in the Arab World. According to Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p. 6) “there are still not enough translations published from Arabic, and that, with some exceptions, interest in books coming from the Arab World is determined by socio-political factors rather than by the desire to explore the literary culture of the Middle East and North Africa for its own merits.” As a result, there was an incremental increase in the number of Arabic works translated into English in the second half of the twentieth century. In detail,

Things began to change from the late 1960s: from this point, through the 1970s and 1980s, there was a gradual but crucial expansion in academic interest in Arabic literature. The literary scholarship this new interest produced helped to gain a degree of respect and legitimacy for Arabic literature as an art form, beyond its supposed function as a social document. A healthier number of translations began to appear in English — according to S.J. Altouma around sixty novels and forty anthologies were published between 1968 and 1988 (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.20).

However, other statistical studies show that “situation improved slightly with eighty-four titles being published in translation between 1967 and 1988” (Three Percent 2008, para.2). In the last ten years of the 20th century, there was a sharp progress in promoting for Arabic authors in translations. That is, the furthering of translations from Arabic hinged upon the concern of some translation competent consortia, and their awareness of the significance of the translations into English in different levels.

By the mid-1990s an extensive corpus of Arabic fiction has become accessible in English translation to an equally expanded audience. [...I Arabists have, on the whole, focused more on Egypt than on other Arab countries. [. . .T]he translation and printing of Egyptian works have been promoted through active support by such institutions, Egyptian and non-Egyptian, as the Ministry of Culture's General Egyptian Book Organisation the American University in Cairo Press, the American Research Centre in Egypt. and York Press (Al-Omary 2010, p.279).

It is logical to consider new and unprecedented events in a certain place as a substantial cause for the increased interest in translating literary works produced by writers of such a place. In other words, the tenses the situation anywhere, the greater the interest in the literature of that place or culture and its translation is likely to be. For example, due to events in the Arab World, more intellectuals paid attention to Arabic literature and the translation of it into other languages. The translation of Arabic literature, including books, novels, poems, short stories, biographies, autobiographies and documentaries was furthered in the years following the tragic and tumultuous events in Arab history. For example, the Palestinian situation, which began in the year of 1948, urged Palestinian and non-Palestinian translators to communicate the experience of Palestinians to a larger audience via English-language translations, as the database of this research shows. Away from English translations, Hebrew translations of Palestinian literature for example, were also influenced by the Palestinian issue; “the attitude of Israeli Jewish culture to translations from Arabic literatures, including Palestinian literature, into Hebrew has been directly affected by the Jewish-Arab (later, Israeli-Arab) conflict” (Amit-Kochavi 2000, p.57).

To return to the main point of this section, the events of September 2001 also accelerated the translation Arabic literary works into English. Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p.18) confirm, “the events of September 2001 lead to a surge of interest in the Arab World, reflected in everything from Arabic provision and uptake at universities to a growing interest in and consumption of Arabic cultural product. In the UK, the British Council and Arts Council England followed the trend with an increased support for initiatives aimed at bringing Arab literature closer to the UK reading public...”

The first years of the first and second decades of the current century saw an upward increase in Arabic literature, let alone in translations. The reason for that manifest rise was the literary events and contributions some Arab countries did.

Some of this attention can be traced back to 2004, when the Arab World was made the official focus of interest at the world's biggest book fair in Frankfurt; four years later, Saudi Arabia was made guest of honour at the London Book Fair. Both generated deals and interest for Arabic authors. In October 2011, Arabia began Swallow Editions, a not-for-profit organisation that publishes books that have never been available in Arabic, let alone in translation. Meanwhile, in Doha, Bloomsbury Qatar Foundation Publishing has been publishing in both Arabic and in English translation since 2008, as well as setting up training sessions, mentoring and internships (Holland, 2011, p.5-7).

Back to the sociopolitical events that took place in the Arab World, in the first years of the 2000s, the “translation of Iraqi literature into English focused on those works that shed light on the American invasion of Iraq in the year of 2003” (Qutait, 2016). Thus, some international translators were interested in Iraqi literary works that depict Iraq during the war. These works, for translators, will be of interest of different readers worldwide.

The year 2008 witnessed an increased number of translations of Arabic titles into English. More accurately, “21 works of adult literature and poetry were translated from Arabic into English in terms of 2008, so the position has most definitely improved. . . .” (Three Percent 2008, para.3). In late 2010, the translation of Arabic literature into English mushroomed due to the events of the Arab Spring. Thus, Western audiences could better understand the incentive behind the revolts. Moreover, “Alice Guthrie (bottom) will discuss her translations of contemporary Arabic slangs and dialects. She will explore the significance of writing in non-traditional ways during times of uprising and revolution” (The Common, 2015). Furthermore, through a report about translation from Arabic into English in the UK and Ireland, Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p.6) say, “the number of literary translations published over the period covered by the study [1990-2010] (310 in total) doubled in the second decade, and especially in the second half of it. While in the first years of the 1990s the average number of published translations was between two and eight per year, in the 2000s the average rose to between ten and sixteen, with twenty-six translations from Arabic published in 2009.”

In the case of Syria, and due to the political escalations in most of the Syrian cities, works by Syrian writers have lately received special attention after 2011. This is because literature from Syria in this period focuses more on the lives of millions of refugees, the homeless, the loss of land, destruction, immorality, to mention but a few. In this regard, Weiss (2017) says, “the Syrian uprising that broke out in 2011, and the civil war and international conflict(s) that have followed, generated unprecedented interest in Syria, its politics and, to a lesser extent, its culture. This talk considers various aspects of the ethics and politics of translating Syrian literature—of translating Syria—in this time of massive human suffering and complex political crisis.”

Sudanese literature, on the other hand, despite the outbreaks of protests there, has not been adequately rendered into the English. This could refer to the scarcity of translation establishments, weak supervision of the literary outcome in Arabic. In turn, this affects the process of producing works in English translation. On that topic, Al-Safi (2018, n.p.) comments,

The Sudanese literary texts translated and published from Arabic into English are so shallow, and they do not keep along with the pace of translation movement. Like other Arabic literatures, there is no ultimate percentage to the Sudanese Arabic titles in English translation. Thus, “it is hard to figure out the percentage of the study and following up, especially in the midst of the absence of reliable sources that observe whatever written in Arabic, including the translated ones my translation from Arabic.

In fact, translation of someone’s Arabic works into English depends on where he or she lives. In other words, if the writer stays resident in a place where he or she remains relatively unknown, his or her literary outcomes may not draw the attention of translators, thus denying them the opportunity to have their work transmitted to a wider audience. For instance, the Western audience knows neither Libyan literary works nor the country’s scholars. In this respect, Diana (2013, p. 30) confirms, “less well known to Western audience are the Libyan writers of adab al-manfa’ who write in Arabic. The only exception within them is of course Ibrāhīm al-Kawnī, whose books have been translated into almost forty languages and who has been living in Switzerland since 1993.” The Libyan literary works that have been translated into English tend to describe sociopolitical life in Libya. An example of this is the story of The Wonderful Short Life of The Dog Ramadan by Omar el Kiddi, translated into English by Robin Moger in 2011 for Banipal Magazine, in a volume dedicated to Libyan fiction. It is a satirical description of the smuggling of migrants between the Libyan and Italian coasts.

Regarding the topics prevailing in most of modern Arabic literature, the place of production, and the common interest tendency made Arabic literature be a minor literature. On that, Laouyene (2012, p.1) says, “according to Deleuze and Guattari, a minor literature is one that exhibits three major characteristics: the deterritorialization of the major language in which it is written, the political nature of its subject matter, and the collectivistic orientation of its enunciative moments (16-17).”

In the same course, translation of Arabic literature into other languages increased to meet the needs of some educational institutions that look forward to understanding the Arab World through literature. In a similar case, West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland (2010, p.iii) comment on Australian literature in German translation “translation has also advanced to the status of a key epistemological instrument for understanding other cultural operations.” Thus, Arabic literature in English translation is a perfect method to get a whole picture in case translation carries the exact tenor the source text holds. On this, Allen (1969, p.9) says, “it is therefore confined to those authors who are of sufficient importance to merit mention in a survey course, and, equally as important, whose works are available in good translations, it is to be hoped that even such a preliminary list as this may be of some use to those members of the association who are engaged in the teaching of modern Arabic literature.”

Pursuant to the interest that Arabic literature receives in English translations, significant efforts have been made to contain the translated works of pivotal Arab writers in print. Thus, the reader of Arabic authors in English translations can utilize them to conduct potential studies and research. So the most notable titles in this field are Modern Arabic Literature in Translation: A Companion (2005) by Salih J. Altoma, Modern Arabic Fiction (2008) by Salma Khadra Jayyusi, An Anthology of Arabic Literature (2016) by Tarif Khalidi, Arabic Poems (2014) by Marlé Hammond, A Reader of Modern Arabic Short Stories (1988) by Sabry Hafez and Catherine Cobham, Emerging Arab Voices (2010) by Claire Peak, The Garden of Joys (1979) by Henry Cattan, Modern Arabic Short Stories (2008) by Ronak Husni and Daniel L. Newman, The Literary Heritage of the Arabs: An Anthology (2011) by Suheil Bushrui and James M. Malarkey, Classical Poems by Arab Women: A Bilingual Anthology (1999) by Abdullah al-Udhari, Bedouin Poetry: From Sinai and the Negrev (2002) by Clinton Bailey, Victims of a Map: A Bilingual Anthology of Arabic Poetry (Adonis, Mahmud Darwish, Samih al-Qasim) (1984) by Abdullah al-Udhari and others.

On the contrary, it would be rational to say that all has already been mentioned above could not be taken for granted. That is, what has happened in the Arab World recently; the Arab Spring, might not attract the attention of the Western audience to read literature of this period. This however could be due to the fact that some Arab writers whose works are already in English language translation would be of interest of the Western readers. East (2011, para.7) comments, “and while the likes of Bahaa Taher from Egypt and Lebanon's Elias Khoury continue to grow in popularity via excellent translations, it's a little too glib to say the Arab Spring will bring a greater interest in contemporary fiction translated from Arabic.”

In summary, Arabic literature received an exponential increase in attention from western audiences and translation houses in recent times because of exoteric political happenings, including amongst others September 11, the Arab Spring, the Palestinian question. Sayaheen (2015, p.189) shows, “September 11 increased the interest in translating Arabic works in general (46.67%), Arabic works of fiction, (60.00%), and Arabic religious works (33.33%).” Further initiatives have been taken to compile the English translations of Arabic literature in definite books and websites. This includes the founding of PROTA in 1980, the establishing of East-West Nexus Centres in 1991 for the translation of Arabic literature in general and the dissemination of Arabic culture and civilization, the establishment of the Arab Organization for Translation in 2000, the building of websites, like Free Verse, PoemHunter, Adab, etc. Moreover, “some scholars wrote their narratives and poetry in Arabic and English like Jabra Ibrahim Jabra, Edward Said, and others write in many languages, as Raja Shehadeh, Nizar Zuabi” (Handal 2016, para.7).

Banipal Magazine in the UK also published 39 numbers, starting from its opening in 1998 until 2010. These numbers in fact included 650 English-language translations commissioned in England. However, the process of documenting English-language translations of the Arabic titles is far from complete because of “the shortage of reliable statistical data about Arabic-language works translated into English and published in the U.S. except for the UNESCO’s Index Translationum which is incomplete” Sayaheen (2015, p.191). Despite this, the English-language translation of Arabic literature is still poor in comparison with produced literary works in Arabic. On that, “the 3rd Arab Human Development Report (2003), and based on antiquated and incomplete data, deems the current Arabic translation movement strikingly weak and calls for an ambitious and integrated Arab strategy in the field of translation” (Jacquemond 2009, P.1).

3.3.2 Why not enough translation?

The field of Arabic-English translation has been stimulated in recent times by, amongst other things, such developments as the introduction of the International Prize for Arabic Fiction (IPAF) in English translation, the establishing of new translation ventures, the increased allocation of funding for translators book fairs and literary events. Nevertheless, increase efforts have not sufficed to let Arabic literary fiction and nonfiction in English-language translation present a picture that reflects the orient to the occident. In this area, Alhirthani (2017, p.132) confirms, “the Arab translation movement witnessed a surge in the last three decades, embodied in the establishment of translation promoting organizations as mentioned above, yet so far the output of translating from Arabic into other languages is still meager.” I will relate the most important reasons for the stunted development of the field of Arabic-English translations.

The world economic crisis of 2007, which began in the USA and spreading then to Europe, hindered the translation of Arabic authors into English. On this, Tarbush (2012, para.22) confirms, “the developments in Arabic-to-English literary translation this century have been impressive, but the global economic downturn is leading arts funding bodies to cut their budgets. Some UK-based publishers of translated Arabic fiction have recently suffered Arts Council cuts.” In this regard, Al-Omary clarifies that problems of translation in the Arab World are also due to the lack of money specified for translation. He adds (2010, p.278), “translated literature cannot enjoy a better interest then. The problem of interest is overcome by the problem of funding and the whole thing turns over to be claimed economic.”

Additionally, according to Al-Omary views on who translates and publishes Arabic literature, he attributes the weakness of translation of Arabic fiction into English to the fact that translation is conducted individually rather than institutionally. In this respect, Al-Omary (2010, p.276) criticizes, “Arabic literature enjoys, unfortunately, more individually-oriented translations than institutionally-oriented ones. This can be the full stop to the above question, but there are still the publishers.” In the same vein, Al-Safi (2018) adds, “the translated literary texts from Arabic into English are mostly just individual efforts” (my translation from Arabic). In other words, the nonexistence of official consortia in the Arab World formed an enormous intricacy to the process of translation. On that topic, Al-Omary (2010, p.276) adds, “no official institutions exist to encourage translating Arabic literature.” On the contrary, the translations of American fiction or nonfiction texts are oriented either by institutions or run by individuals in exchange for stipends. This in turn is one of the major reasons for American literature’s international renown.

Further, the fragile cooperation between the publishing houses and translation consortia, and the governmental associations negatively affects the trials to promote Arabic-English translations. In his thesis, Al-Omary (2010, p.276) affirms, “the political link seems to be lost between the Arabic literary author and the government which is supposed to encourage him. Many translators, national or foreign, realize this broken link. They also realize that their translations are not encouraged and supported officially.” In the same context, the authoritative and factional agendas in the Arab World are a stumbling block to Arabic-English translations. In other words, the absence of the cultural authority that follows up the literary production in Arabic and English-language translation weakens the process of translation. That is to say, “the moral responsibility of the official authorities is almost absent toward their literatures. To give an example, Yemeni literature has but little presence in English translation, let alone in other western and eastern languages.” (Al-Omary 2010, p.277). More gravely, the nonexistence of cultural stakeholders in different parts of the Arab World led to the low availability of Arabic texts in English translation. On this matter, Al-Omary (2010, p.278) confirms, “cultural attaches do not tend to do anything serious to promote their own literature in its original language. Many departments of Arabic libraries complain of the lack of material on Yemeni literature.” Regarding the factional affiliation, some scholars I interviewed in Palestine, in person or by telephone, said that if the writer has no rapport with some influential people in a certain party, his or her works remain in the source language.

With the treatment of translation as a hobby not a job is another hurdle that prevents overcoming the longstanding shortage in Arabic English translation. As a conformation of the foregoing, Al-Omary (2010, p.277) comments, “translation from Arabic is not a profession in which there are any degrees or standards or rewards. The best you can say is that nobody translates Arabic unless they are an 'amateur' in the original sense of the word, in the sense of 'lover'." In addition, "translation [from Arabic] is not seen as a viable career choice among students and graduates" (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.7).

Arab society itself must take the greatest part of the responsibility for the lack of translations. The Arab people's negative attitudes towards their languages and culture add fuel to the fire. They actually do not understand their culture and literature; the other cannot in return understand them either. Henceforth, "we have to know ourselves before we seek to make the Other know us. Knowing ourselves cannot be achieved unless our languages, literatures and cultures are respected by us first. If translation is to play a role in this direction, then we should care a lot about the role it can play. It should not be marginalized" (Al-Omary 2010, p.280).

The most vivid example which I can cite here to show the passiveness of the Arabs towards their own literature, I draw from my experiences during the Bachelor's and Master's degrees at the English department of An-Najah National University in Palestine between 2008 and 2016. During these two periods the educational staff never motivated the students to read Palestinian texts in English translation. This in turn draws the Palestinian student's attention away from his or her own culture. This means that students are unlikely to chance upon the idea of translating their culture into other languages, as they have never studied it themselves.

Because of the obstacles I have already mentioned that prohibited any progress on English translations of Arabic authors, the international translation houses and individual translators took it upon themselves to translate any Arabic text they are interested in. In other words, the hurdles above ceded control of Arabic literature to the West, this in fact "worsens the situation, and adds more wet to mud, as the Arabs say, that the hegemony of the West over the whole Orient creates its particular crises" (Al-Omary 2010, p.282). This leads to the translation of the kind of texts that interest the Occident. That is to say, the western institutions and translators are selective in their choice of works for translation. They focus mainly on to show the disadvantages of the Arab's traditions. In other words,

The West translates what may 'pour' into its interest. It translates either to recognise or to get recognised. As a matter of fact, the Arabic books translated into English are not popular; they are just taught at certain departments at universities with an aim to study these peoples, know how they think and then launch attacks on their cultures in their own environments.. The West wants to read books of the kind similar to The Thousand Nights and One. They have certain stereotypes on the Orient. They do not want novels on ordinary people thinking of issues related to our age. They draw themselves away from the serious literature that captures the attention of those who are specialised in the Mideast Studies (Al-Omary 2010, p.279).

Additionally, the most preferred Arabic texts for English-language translations are likely those that depict the West as a superior society. In this regard, Al-Omary (2010, p.279) approves, "Arab writers who promoted the West and its cultural values in their writings are placed in the front. Najib Mahfuz [whose 32 out of 35 novels were published in English] and Nawal al-Sa'dawi from the Arab World and Salman Rushdi from India are best examples. Till this date, the first decade of the third millennium, the Arab Orient is placed literarily and culturally under the same politics of perception and representation."

By contrast, the stereotypes that the West holds about the Arabs and their cultures lure the West away attempting to provide accurate representations of Arab. On the other hand, the West tried to impose the cultural values on the Orient owing to the political power it had. It means that translation in the early beginnings of the second half of the nineteenth century was increasingly unilateral, i.e. from the western languages into Arabic.

To sum up, due to a variety of reasons and grounds, there is consensus that the translation of Arabic literature into English is still inadequate. Translation from Arabic into English remains the preserve of specialized publishers. The interest in books produced in the Arab World is somehow determined by socio-political factors. Lack of interest and belief of the Arabs in their own culture and literature, the cultural lag of Arab societies, and their faulty insertion in international economy of knowledge are also an obstacles to increasing the amount of translations made. The costs of translation and publishing in the Arab World are high and unsubsidized. The absence of the monitoring of the process of translation and publishing made the translation from Arabic into English worse. The European selection process of Arabic texts for translation choice is devoted mostly to the image that depicts the Arabs as reactionary and corrupt. In addition to the nonexistence of collective translation initiatives (Büchler and Guthrie, 2011; Jacquemond, 2009; Nassar, 2011; Shosheh, 2015; Jayyusi, 2007; Elmani, 2011; Clark 2000; Aksoy, 2005).

The reasons above summarize the worsening background against which Arabic-English translation takes place. I regard this section here as a trajectory to the serious causes that prevent the Arabic texts to emerge favorably in the English-language translation, especially that they mostly include real sociopolitical issues. On the other hand, I tend to wrap up the discussion of this section to say, the problems of translating Arabic literature into English should not be dealt as an invincible iceberg, nor should the translation students, translators or the amateurs surrender to the challenges and missteps that hinder any advances in the increase of Arabic literary works in English-language translation. On the contrary, they have to take all of the aforementioned challenges into account in order overcome them to upgrade Arabic literature in English-language translation.

3.4 Translation of Palestinian Literature in general

This section of the study takes mainly Palestinian literature in English-language translations. It throws light on the most prominent collective initiatives for the sake of Palestinian literature in English-language translations. Furthermore, it examines the reasons for the exponential increase in English-language presentations of Palestinian literature. On the other side, it presents the blockades the slow down the presence of Palestinian literature in English-language renditions.

3.4.1 Growing translation

As has been mentioned in different sections of this thesis, Palestinian literature constructs an overarching image that devotedly reflects Palestinian sociopolitical life and claims back the rights that the Palestinian people were stripped of not only during the British mandate; from 1917 until 1947, but also on the eve of the creation of the Israeli state in 1948 (see Masoud 2009, p.1-9).

Translated literature has not shied away from politics and conflict; it has rather been in the midst of the social issues and the political events. Translation in fact promotes the needs of a certain culture; it seemingly figures in sociopolitical developments and humane issues (Yaoxian, 2007; Munday, 2009; Bermann, 2014, Frenkel, 2005; Venuti, 2008; Jayyusi, 2014).

Based on statistics included in Appendix (2) of the Numbers of Palestinian Literary Works in Arabic between 1948- 2019, I found out that of the aggregate number of Arabic-Palestinian literary works of fiction since 1948, about 23% are novels, approximately 19% are short story collections, nearly 44.5% are poetic manuscripts and about 7% are dramas and 2.5% take form of prose texts. This thesis's statistical section also shows that the respective percentages for Palestinian nonfiction works were as follows: 2.5% are autobiographies, biographies lie at 0.8%, and 0.7% are testimonials.

Regarding the literary works of the Palestinian avant-garde after 1948 in particular, one involved in translation has to be with good awareness of the issues of this land. Here; in this research, I say not that translators should engage themselves with politics, but they should at least get a general overview of the disconcerting status quo that defines the context literature. On that, Farag (2018, n.p.) says, "it's popular to think that literature gives us a 'window into the lives of others' and other similar cliches, but marginalized, stigmatized subjectivities such as the Palestinians' aren't a costume that we can try on and take off at our whim by opening and closing a book. The desire to better understand diverse Palestinian experiences through their literature is noble, the claim to authoritatively know Palestinians through it isn't."

Given the aesthetic, thematic, and patriotic values that Palestinian literature draws on, it should remain neither dormant nor restricted to the Arab readers who know mostly what is going on in Palestine. Henceforth, literature has to be rendered into other languages and cultures.

Due to the leitmotifs that the literary works of the Palestinian writers draw on for the immediate cessation of the suffering of millions of Palestinians, the last twenty-seven years have witnessed a spike of interest in the translation of Palestinian literature, let alone the compiling of translations in books, magazines and on various websites and social media. Thus, the translation pattern of Palestinian literature has recently gained momentum to let the world know more about to the Palestinian, compared to the first four decades after the Nakba 1948.

This research in fact assesses the progress made towards a wider reception of Arabic writing from Palestine throughout the Anglophone world, with particular emphasis on the work of the Palestinian poet and translator Salma Khadra Jayyusi. In her 1992 book Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature, she took upon herself the task of gathering the works of a variety of Palestinian poets, storytellers, and translators. Jayyusi's famous book of English translations includes 186 poems written by forty-three Palestinian poets, 25 short stories written by twenty five storytellers, 2 selections of novels, 13 personal accounts, in addition to 28 poems written by six Palestinian poets writing originally in English.

In this present research, I fully am aware of the extent to which Palestinian literary works are receptive to the current situations in the neighboring lands and influential in the evolution of other literary traditions in other parts of the world. Thus, this research sheds light on Nur Elmessiri and Abdelwahab Elmessiri, who shouldered the further burden of gathering 38 translated works by 22 Palestinian storytellers in the 1996 book of A Land of Stone and Thyme: An Anthology of Palestinian Short Stories. Palestinian short story writers have come onto the literary scene since the 1960s. This study takes into consideration the work of Abdelwahab Elmessiri too, which became clearly visible through his 1982 book The Palestinian Wedding: A Bilingual Anthology of Contemporary Palestinian Resistance Poetry.

In 1998, the endeavours of the late Izzat Ghazzawi came together with Claire Peak and the translator Abdul-Fattah Jabr to produce a new collection of stories in English-language translation. Accordingly, they could have attempted to introduce the Palestinian culture to others. Their book Modern Palestinian Short Stories in Translations contains apparently a variety of short stories that describe the sociopolitical status quo. In the year of 1997, Izza Ghazzawi produced Modern Palestinian Poetry in Translation, covering selected works of 35 Palestinian poets. In 2003, he continued to translate the works of a group of journalists and writers in a short story collection, titled Wounded Birds Feature Stories.

In 1999, Daniel Weissbort, the English poet and translator, surveyed the last 50 years of Palestinian history. He held that the best way to understand the Arab Israeli conflict was not by reading the news media, but rather by reading the poems of the two respective cultures. In this vein, his anthology Palestinian and Israeli Poetry (Modern Poetry in Translation, Third Series) take the form of a collection of verse by a group of Palestinian and Israeli poets.

In 2003, the scholar Said Abdelwahed wrote a PhD thesis, titled Stories from Palestine, in which he translated some Palestinian short stories into English.

In the year of 2008, David J. Constantine and Helen Constantine collected Palestinian poems translated into English by seven Palestinian and international translators, like Fady Joudah, Peter Cole, Jennie Feldman and others in the book of Palestine: Modern Poetry in Translation, Third Series.

In 2014, Henry Bell and Sarah Irving produced a book, titled A Bird is Not A Stone: An Anthology of Contemporary Palestinian Poetry. It contains contemporary Palestinian poetry translated by 25 Scotland's very best writers, like Don Paterson, Jackie Kay and others.

Jamal Assadi, the head of the English department at the college of Sakhnin-Palestine, did not hesitate to furnish the English library shelves with his English translations of Palestinian literary works, which in fact seem as if they were written originally in English. His contributions to the Palestinian literature in the Anglophone world include, Three Voices from the Galilee: Selected Short Stories by Mohammad Naffaa, Zaki Darwish and Naji Daher in 2009, Father and son: selected short fiction by Ḥannā Ibrāhīm; Muḥammad 'Alī Sa'īd in 2009, Loud Sounds from the Holy Land: Short Fiction by Palestinian Women Jamal Assadi in 2011, The Story of a People: An Anthology of Palestinian Poets within the Green-Lines in 2011, in addition to his part work with Saif Abu Saleh Short Fiction as a Mirror of Palestinian Life in Israel, 1944–1967: Critique and Anthology in 2017.

Gaza Writes Back (2013) by is a compelling anthology of short fiction from 15 young Gazan writers who have suffered bitterly from the constant blockade of Gaza. In addition, Gaza suffered during Israel's phosphorus bombing between 2008 and 2009; Operation Cast Lead, and the 15 authors herein reflect that time in their short stories. Refaat Alareer, an English lecturer at the Islamic University of Gaza edited this anthology. Unlike the rest of short stories that were written originally in English, the two short stories Canary and Will I ever get back were translated from Arabic by Raafat Alareer and Mohammed Suliman respectively. This collection consists of 23 accounts of what life is like in the war-stricken Gaza Strip. As stated before, Gaza Writes Back (2013) is an anthology of biographical and autobiographical accounts of the experiences of the Gazans during and following the Israeli 2008-2009 Operation Cast Lead, on which Alhirthani (2017, p.134) comments, "Gaza Writes Back (Alareer 2013) is a prime example of the determination of young Palestinians to fight back and foreground Palestinian identity. Gaza has been under siege and has suffered three wars since 2006. The catastrophic repercussions of these wars on the Palestinian society encouraged a group of English language students at several Gaza universities to document their memories of war in English."

In 2013, the Palestinian novelist Atef Abu Saif compiled a dozen of the most effective Palestinian short stories under the title of The book of Gaza: a city in short fiction. It was translated into English in 2014 by some translators, like Chelsea Milsom, Lauren Pyott and others. This anthology describes the cordon surrounding the Gaza Strip. The authors in this anthology range from highly known writers to new voices and bloggers, like Mona Abu Sharikhm, Dawlat Al Masri, Najla Attalah and others.

In March 2018, Noami Foyle in cooperation with Mustafa Abu Sneineh and the Iraqi translator Waleed Al-Bazoon celebrated a new book, titled A Blade of Grass: New Palestinian Poetry. This bilingual book brings together new poetic works in Arabic and English by poets from Palestine, the diaspora and from behind the Green Line. This Anthology of Poetic experiences contains fresh and seasoned voices, such as Mahmoud Darwish, Marwan Makhoul, Maya Abu Al-Hayyat, Sara Saleh, and other eight. In fact, a group of nine international translators translated this book from Arabic.

In 2019, Husam Ramadan, the author of this thesis, edited a book of poetry under the title of Handala, Show Us Your Face!. This collection includes forty poems written originally in Arabic by twenty Palestinian poets.

Ramadan and other local and international translators translated the poems into the English language. The publishing of this book fills up some existing data gaps. That is, this research includes a digital database which consists of data on Palestinian literature in English-language translation, like the name of the translator, the year of translation, the year of publication and so on and so forth. However, due to the lack of some of this data, Ramadan talked to some writers of the poems included in this book to take information about the name of translators, the year of translation before he published the book. As a result, all of the information about the translation of poems included in this book are recorded in the digital catalogue.

The other books that contribute to English-language translation of Palestinian literature are Palestine: A Conscious Poetic Offering (2018) by the Palestinian poet and translator Nizar Sartaawi, The Arab Epics for Peace (2018) supervised by Abdulaziz Saud Al-Babtain Cultural Foundation in Kuwait, and World Healing, World Peace Poetry by William S. Peters in 2018.

Palestinian literature in English-language translations gives the English readers space to go beyond media and news bulletins to understand the monotonous situation. In other words, in my opinion, literature is an authentic means which expresses the dreams and inspirations of societies away from distortion. On that subject, Abdelwahed (n.d. n.p.) asserts, “Western media channels then compete to defend Israel, which leads to the repeated news and screening of pictures! Their news and pictures paint Palestinians as criminals and the Israelis as victims! Anyways, the case of Gaza keeps the whole situation controversial in the world mass media regardless of their political slants and objectives!”

Different translation centres like, PROTA, East-West Nexus Centres, the PLO Research Centre, other websites like Free Verse, Poemhunter, and Adab made great effort in furthering the translation of Palestinian literature into English language

Now I move to the grounds that noticeably vitalized English-language translation of Palestinian literature .

3.4.2 Why is interest in Palestinian Literature in English-language translation increasing?

Here I tend to shed some light on the English-language translations of Palestinian literature from qualitative perspective. This research looks at the influence of the hard life of the Palestinian people on Palestinian literature and its translations into other dominant world languages, primarily English. The situation in Palestine, including the Nakba, the Naksa, the First Intifada, the Second Intifada, and other events inspired Palestinian intellectuals and amateurs to write more, as noted in earlier sections of this thesis. This had a knock on effect in which increased production led to an increase in the amount of translation work being undertaken by translators and institutions.

This research affirms that translations of Palestinian literature thematically cover the four main watersheds post 1948 Palestinian life. That is, Palestinian literature in Arabic disproportionately talks about the political turning points in Palestine. Consequently, the digital database of this project evidently shows that English-language titles of Palestinian literary works included talk also about the crises in Palestine since 1948 until now in varying proportions. Recently, on December 6, 2017 to be precise the United States signed a declaration recognizing Jerusalem as capital of Israel. The Palestinian poet Hassan Assi wrote a counter poem of the alleged infringement by Trump. I published the English-language translation a month later under the title of Peace Be Upon You, Jerusalem!. The English version of this poem came as a second denouncement of this risky step against Palestinians, and as an instantaneous response to Palestinian's rights violation. I here tend to say, that translation of purposefully chosen texts participates to meet the needs of the societies and to cover most of their sociopolitical life over time.

Selecting certain texts for translation is a key aspect of the decision-making process that is employed to promote a nationalist agenda. So is deselecting certain texts. Şehnaz Tahir-Cürçağlar (2003: 114) points out that the translation bureau in Turkey was established to promote a new identity for a modern republican Turkey... in the hope that the translations of these classics can help shape a new Turkish national identity that is detached from the Ottoman Caliphate (Alhirthani 2017, p.122).

Translation and the dynamic of its development, as the database shows, grew in the years following 1992, that is to say, after Salma Khadra Jayyusi's launched her aforementioned book that was among the earliest initiatives towards the progress in the number of English translations of Palestinian literature. From a different point of view, "the Palestinian translation movement tends to gain momentum at particularly crucial turning points in Palestinian modern history; specifically, an increase in translation activity is evident during the British mandate as well as after the Nakba" (Alhirthani 2017, p.117).

In fact, the issue of the growth in the translation of Arabic literature in English has the subject of discussion among many scholars mentioned in other part of my thesis, including, Handal (2016), Sayaaheen (2015), Diana (2013), Weiss, (2017) to name just a few. Palestinian literature, which has its own peculiarities after being emerged with Arabic national literature in the early beginnings of the 19th century, has recently attracted similar levels of attention from translators to Arabic literatures (see Masoud 2019, p.1-9). Besides, Alhirthani (2017, p.120-24) notes, "the nationalist aspect of translation in Palestine is not separable from the pan-Arab movement of translation...Palestinian nation-ness per se started to take shape during, and after, the British Mandate (1918-1948). Before that, Palestinians were part of the whole Arab umma under the Ottoman Empire." Nevertheless, the reality beyond this translation interest is unlike that of other Arabic literatures.

As an axiom, the West is interested in Palestinian literature, inasmuch as it partially funds some enterprises involved in translating Palestinian literature into English. As I mentioned before, for the West, the tenser the sociopolitical situation somewhere is, the greater the interest in that place's literature and its translation is likely to be. Palestinian literature has taken the task on to talk about the over 70-year mass killing, confiscation of lands, cordoning off from all direction, displacement, disillusionment, exile, deprivation of the simplest rights, looting of houses. English Translations in turn helped to expose these sociopolitical problems to the entire world.

Translation is not only a filler of gaps existing between peoples, but a means to reach social, political and ideological ends. Therefore, we have to deal with translation differently from the traditional standpoints; as only a conveyance of a meaning from the source language into the target language. “Translation is therefore not only perceived as a bridge between cultures and civilizations as was assumed for a long time, but also as a scaffolding for a myriad of ideological and other political and social ends. Nationalism is one major end that helped shape the modern world and its current political and social contours” (Alhirthani 2017, p.117). Moreover, the German theologian, philosopher and theorist Freidrich Schleiermacher showed translation as a significant initiation nationalist movement. The Palestinian translators themselves or the pro-Palestine translators in general resort to translation to prove the right of Palestinians to their own nationalism. Regarding this, Alhirthani (2017, p.118) affirms, “Palestinian nationalism and Palestine’s long struggle as a colonized country occupy a central place in Arab nationalism. The role of translation in promoting Palestinian nation-ness is therefore an important topic of research, and one that has been overlooked in discussions of translation and national identity, despite the fact that Palestine is now a rallying cry for the global movement of justice.”

Hence, nation building and the preservation of identity are some of the multi-faceted reasons for the increase of the Palestinian titles in English-language translations.

The Palestinian translators, including 'Adil Zu'aitir, Ruhi Alkhalidi, Izzat Ghazzawi, Salma Khadra Jayyusi, Jamal Assadi, Nizzar Sartwi, Shareef Elmusa, Naomi Shihab Nye and others were aware of the ideological quandary the Palestinian people have found themselves in since the advent of the Nakba. Thus, one field in which they invested their endeavours was translation; the transparent manner that could bolster Palestinians’ sociopolitical opinions (Shihab-Nye, 1996; Murad, 2016). In this context, Alhirthani (2017, p.122) states that, “ a publisher or a translator or even a writer uses a foreign language as a vehicle to boost their own political social or national views” as those works of writers and translators recorded in the digital catalogue of this thesis. In addition, based on the notion that Palestinian literary narratives are fraught with hope and zeal to maintain the sense of nationhood, and a mirror reflecting certain people’s affairs, big or small, Palestinian bilingual intellectuals therefore, intensified their initiatives, individually or collectively oriented, towards English presentations of literary masterpieces to attain certain ideological objectives.

Translation is employed by some, or even all, of these actors to serve certain ends by formulating narratives that are in keeping with their social and/or political frame of reference. Palestinian translators – individuals and institutions alike –found in translation from Arabic into world languages, mainly English, a means of resistance to the colonial project in Palestine as this form of translation was always "linked with the continuous defense of the Arab existence in Palestine, nationally, politically, culturally (Alhirthani 2017, p.122 & 131-32).

Palestinian literature in Arabic accords largely with events that take place in Palestine. Accordingly, bilingual or multilingual intellectuals who have good command of world languages undertake the process of translation of Palestinian authors, with the intention of challenging the Israeli narratives regarding the dispute for the land. They are fully aware of the value of rendering their narratives beyond linguistic and geographical boundaries.

In general, the increased interest and awareness of translating Arabic-Palestinian titles into other world languages, English in particular, sprouted from the 20th century's translation of other languages' titles into Arabic, especially those that stand shoulder to shoulder with Palestinians and their issues. In research published in 2017, Alhirthani extracted that “23.4% of the total translation production (1920s-1970) was in favor of supporting the Palestinian national self-perception. 209 titles, out of 891 titles that were translated [from other languages] into Arabic by Palestinians promoted the Palestinian nation-ness.”

The notion, which deals with the literary translations of Palestinian narratives as an image of national protest of the inhumane actions conducted by the Israeli state, made the international audience curious about Palestine which in turn drove demand for English-language translations of Palestinian literature. In other words, translation of Palestinian literature is “one form of Palestinian activism, writing in world dominant languages another. According to Tymoczko [the task of the interlingual translator has much in common with the task of the postcolonial writer, where one has a text, however, the other has the metatext of culture itself]. A metatext here stands for the source culture elements that are carried across into the metropolitan discourse” (Alhirthani 2017, P. 133).

Others hold that the attention that Palestinian literature has received in the recent years is due to the interest of the educational institutions in the Palestinian culture and issue and because of their desire to know more about the happenings that take place in Palestine. Therefore, local and international educational intuitions regarded translation as a fecund method for gaining knowledge of the unknown.

Encountering these literatures could therefore be treated as a sort of “misery tourism” wherein students feel like they “really know what it's like to be Palestinian” because they've read a dozen or so texts by Palestinian authors. It's popular to think that literature gives us a “window into the lives of others” and other similar cliches, but marginalized, stigmatized subjectivities such as the Palestinians' aren't a costume that we can try on and take off at our whim by opening and closing a book. The desire to better understand diverse Palestinian experiences through their literature is noble, the claim to authoritatively know Palestinians through it isn't (Farag 2018, n.p.).

Shortly, one can argue that rendering into English the works of Palestinian scholars has been utilized in the recent times to fight for the stripped Palestinian rights and against the expansion of the Zionist project. In fact, getting an exhaustive and exact list of English presentations of Palestinian literature would be a vain hope; it was impossible to arrive at the number of the Palestinian literary titles in English-language translations unless I built the current digital catalogue up. The digital catalogue of this project however tries mostly to gather as much as possible the translated into English literary works since 1948 until nowadays. Thus, one can employ it for studies relevant to the Palestinian question in the future.

3.4.3 The reasons for shallow English translation of Palestinian narratives?

This section is dedicated to the explanation of the reasons that prevent the Palestinian literature be translated properly and adequately into English. From a quantitative point of view, the database of this thesis indicates that the number of Palestinian literary works in English translations do not reach over 1100. In fact, much more work is needed in this regard. There is a huge number of Palestinian novels, short stories, poetic manuscripts, autobiographies, biographies and other literary forms that show faithfully the longstanding suffering of the Palestinian and remain anonymous to the rest of the world. More efforts must be made for Palestinian literature in English-language translation, so other people from other countries could read them and understand the Palestinian culture and issue. This is induced by some reasons discussed hither; in the following lines, and thither; in previous articles, works and studies.

The most recognized reason that limits the numbers of Palestinian literary works in English-language translations is the dispersion of the Palestinian literati and scholars in different parts of the world due to the mass displacement in the late 1940s. That is, the distribution of Palestinian writers within and without Palestine reduces the cooperation between them. In case the writers had the same place of production, the same national publishing houses, it would be easier for translators and translation houses to collect the materials for translation. For example, Jayyusi (1992, n.p.) says, “the production of this [Modern Palestinian Literature] anthology has been even more difficult than such projects are normally are. Since Palestinian poets and writers are scattered over so many countries the task of collecting materials and contacting authors for permission and curricula vitae has, therefore, been an arduous one.”

This dispersion led as well to the cutting of the connection between different translation consortia that boost the narrative of the Palestinian issue to people worldwide. As a result, “there is [now] no systematic, carefully thought out translation movement either inside Palestine, or anywhere in the Arab World. Despite the strong presence of Palestinian translators in the field of Arab translation, Arab institutions have failed to work efficiently to promote the narrative of Palestinian nationhood around the world” (Alhirthani 2017, p.136).

Regarding the literary consortia existing in Palestine after 1948, the Israeli policy controls them totally or partially, thus it allows to publish and translate whatever goes along with its political and ideological agendas and bans what opposes it policy. As a result, “the process of choosing what works to translate/mediate was not organized or structured” (Alhirthani 2017, p.136).

Besides, Israeli cultural institutions neglect the writers and translators who still live in lands beyond the Green Line. Palestinian writers, translators, scholars, workers are mostly not recognized by some cultural institutions and are plainly presented by the characters included in the texts of Israeli Arab writers. So, Farag (2018, n.p.) censures, “even in the case of literature of Palestinian citizens of Israel, the theme is more about how characters in texts navigate the paradox of being citizens of a state that denies their existence.” That it, Israel tries as much as possible to control the literary outcomes that depict the life of Palestinians in the 1948 lands.

Intermittent financial support for the literary translation is another obstacle that slows down the progress of Palestinian literature in English-language translation. (Jayyusi, 2007; Elmani, 2011) (my translation from Arabic). On that, Jayyusi (1992, p.xviii) confirms, “the available funds had already been exhausted. Since the amount needed do not require the support of the business community.” To be precise, the shortage of money ad hoc for the purpose of translating of Palestinian literature into other world languages, English in particular is controlled by faction. In this area, Alhirthani (2017, p.132) says, “financial support is contingent on political affiliation, and as the latter falls in or out of favour, the sources of income either increase or dry up, and with them the availability of resources to support a coherent programme of translation.” Supporting this point, Some of the Palestinian novelists and writers whom I met in Palestine commented on the English-language translations of Palestinian literature and said that too many works were not translated as the writer does not belong to any political faction and is not backed up by any official institutions. Thus, the imbalance in the translation and publication of Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation stems from a glitch in the Palestinian internal affairs.

The other predicament that prevents Palestinian literature to set foot in the non-Arabic speaking countries; where English is dominant or eventually used, is that translation in Palestine or in the Arab World is individually not institutionally oriented. That is to say the translator works on his or her own without belonging to any official institutions that guarantee their civil rights. This leads in the end to the disheartening of the translators because of the irregular stipends paid to them coupled with their treatment as hobbyist not as accredited professionals. In different words, “bad pay keeps standards down, making people rush, cram, work when tired; it also means work gets farmed out to translators who are not really ready to take it on yet. I think literary translators should be paid more. A lot of the faults in translations as they are now may stem from people doing them too quickly because they aren’t being paid much and can’t afford to spend the necessary amount of time on them” (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.74)

In general, the nonexistence of authorized associations that seriously sponsor the process of rendering into English Palestinian literature worsens the position of translation. Here, I mean the translation of Palestinian literature into English based typically on the social relation between the writer and the translator. For example, during a phone call I made with some Palestinian scholars, like William Foskrjian, I was informed that when the author or authoress has no rapport with whoever translates Palestinian literature into different languages, their works would remain with no translation. Additionally, only the writers who won fame due to either their affiliation or their bestselling literary products become the only cynosure of all translators, while the others remain marginalized; which in fact adds insult to the injury.

As mentioned above but indirectly, translation from English into Arabic has helped to represent the Palestinian culture and case. Correspondingly, I could here say that translation of Palestinian literature into English could prove the Palestinian right on the international stage. However, what limits progress in the numbers of Palestinian translations is the lack of “a clear strategic plan that can help unite efforts” Alhirthani (2017, p.134) towards a translation movement that could overlap with other Arab translation movements. This in fact is the result to the lack of awareness of the significance of Palestinian literature and the value of translation in building up identity.

Let me add one further qualification at this point. The rendering of Arabic literature into other languages is actually essential to introduce Arab culture to others, and the need for direct means of translating Arabic literary works in general and Palestinian literature in particular is important for the Palestinian case, nevertheless there is not any real, exhaustive, easily accessible bibliography to find out the volume of translations of Palestinian literary works into English. This actually averted the eyes of the insiders of Palestinian literature from examining the numbers of English versions of this literature. If there was a direct access of Palestinian literature in English-language translations, key stakeholders could have taken action in case the numbers and publications were too few .

As discussed earlier, there is always an urgent need to translate Arabic literary production regarding Palestinian political and ideological developments. Translation of Palestinian literature emerges to be for the sake of the Palestinian issue, the Palestinian right in the throes of crises practiced by the Zionist project, and for persecuted on social grounds. On the one hand, it is entirely apparent that there was a surge in the numbers of translations of Palestinian literature into English in the last three decades in particular. On the other hand, there are no serious steps taken by official institutions or stakeholders towards the upgrading of the status of translation of Arab works in public, and the Palestinian literature and the locus of the conflict, in particular. This section mentions as well some hurdles that block the rush for more English translations of Palestinian literature. Until the time of writing (i.e. late 2019), it has been challenging to easily get an overall image of the Palestinian translated literature, including novels, short stories, poetic manuscripts, biographies, autobiographies, prose texts, documentaries, and testimonies, due to the nonexistence of reliable, accessible digital resource that would benefit the general profile of translated works. This study seeks to remedy this.

Chapter 4: Centralized National Translation Online Resources

This section of study seeks to offer strong evidence for the value of building up a database covering all translated Palestinian literary works in English since 1948. It hinges upon a variety of viewpoints that see in distance reading, which is represented in the constructions of such digital catalogues, a worthwhile and modern approach for analyzing a myriad of literary works in particular. This section as well presents some examples of the most renowned databases in the literary field around the world. It then goes specifically further to talk about the actual databases or catalogues performed for the benefit of Palestinian identity. Moreover, it discusses the components of the digital catalogues, which are part and parcel of finishing my current project up.

4.1 Relevant notions

West-Pavlov's and Elze-Volland's note that the world literary field may facilitate the re-conceptualization of [whatever] literature beyond the national paradigm. What does world literary field mean?

The term "Weltliteratur" was coined by Goethe...was predicted by Marx's meditations upon a emergent capitalist world economy...and has re-emerged into prominence in recent years as a prominent domain of literary conceptualization in the wake of theorization on globalization...Theories of world literature build upon Luhmann's or Lotman's systems theories...or upon Bourdieu's field theory, expanding his work on cultural capital ... or the field of cultural production... . Casanova's theory of a world literature is based upon World-system theory... which articulates global economic patterns upon relationships of centre and periphery, thus allowing an articulation of the complex differentials of cultural capital and the dynamics of the cultural field and on the world market. Recent pioneering analyses of translation history implementing a systemic approach...have demonstrated the potential of this conceptual instrument (West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland 2010, p.vi).

Based on contribution of the concept "Weltliteratur" to the circulation of literary works into wider ranges and beyond their country of origin, this study adopts the opinion of West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland on the re-conceptualization of [Palestinian] literature further than the indigenous paradigm.

For West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland, global field theories necessitate a number of methodological shifts that are important for literary studies. One of them "is the shift from a hermeneutics of translation analysis towards an-empirical- systemic description" (West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland 2010, p.vi). This shift rather means to change the old conceptualization of literary texts and "implies a re-orientation of the analytic methodology from individual textual analysis to systemic analysis, from -literary texts- to -literary objects" (West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland 2010, p.vii). This systematic process implies the redefining of texts, not individually but collectively to get a full image of all pertinent circumstances. Based on the design by Franco Moretti, “it implies a zooming-out from the time-honoured method of close reading to what he calls distant reading: distance ... is a condition of knowledge ...” West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland 2010, p.vii). Distant reading in fact “gives way to focus on units that are much smaller or larger than the text: devices, themes, tropes – or genres and systems” (Moretti 2004, p.151).

In fact, this new systematic way to draw on the literary works opposes the old methods to study literature. In other words, adopting a modernized strategy for the sake of analyzing literature would be a good opportunity for the literary genres that have been disregarded for financial, political and social reasons, to draw international attention and be existing in one literary body. On this,

He [Moretti] has suggested that we need to abandon a longue durée concept of literary history understood as an histoire événementielle positing a small number of individual works and authors whose role is to triumph over the norm, thereby marking significant moments of rupture of genre; rather, systemic literary theory would turn its gaze back to literary genres which conform to convention and have hitherto been neglected by literary history (West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland 2010, p.vii).

This current project adopts as a part of the data registered in the catalogue a new approach to interpret literary texts, and shifts away from the antique way of analyzing literary texts to gain a wider view of translating Palestinian literature in English. Therefore, the following subsection tries mostly to shed light on other projects that match to the current project. In other words, I mention the most common and well-known projects covering the translational works in different periods and languages and in many areas in the world.

4.2 National translation databases

First and foremost, the bibliography or the digital catalogue of Palestinian literature in English-language translation, is not the first of the other world’s translation statistical studies. Other national databases however preceded the database that I have been building up over the course of the last three years; from 2016 to 2019. The stakeholders who established other translation bibliographies did so out of their awareness of the key role translation plays in building nation-ness, presenting to the others the ambitions and principles some nations have. They, the constructors of the databases, are fully aware of the significance of translation statistical databases in drawing the attention of translations institutions and individuals towards the magnitude of translated works in respective languages. As a result, they could take concerted action in cases in which deficits became evident.

According to Büchler’s and Guthrie’s report entitled Literary Translation from Arabic into English in the United Kingdom and Ireland, 1990-2010, which contains approximately 359 annotated records, many attempts have been made to construct digital bibliographies of translations in the British Isles, such as the British Council translation website. This website included works translated into other languages like Farsi and Greek and provided linguistically, culturally appropriate and timely translations utilized by communities with different languages into which the original English texts were translated. Otherwise, it would not be possible to get a full picture of the history of translation in the British Isles, nor discern trends in translation publishing. As a result, there was an urgent need to create a mechanism to collect data on the publishing of translations. In addition, the authors call for creation of a database of translated theatre plays, especially those plays that were not published in book form.

Additionally, The Arab League Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization (ALECSO) compiled a statistical report to arrive at precise numbers of translated books from the Al-Ma'moon era in the 9th century until 1985. This report has led to a good overview of status of translation. Apart from the significance of this study, “[it] is thus antiquated data, but it is above all highly distorted, because in its 1985 survey ALECSO had relied on data provided by the Arab states, data that was itself very much deficient” (Jacquemond 2009, p.5). Moreover, in terms of translated books in the Arab World, the other database that has been gathered for potential studies is the UNESCO database Index translationum, which is now available online. But the UNESCO database is no more reliable than the ALECSO figures “because it also relies on data provided by the individual states and is thus dependent on the extremely variable conditions of bibliographical documentation in each country” (Jacquemond 2009, p.5).

A further translation database is the Index translationum in Lebanon. It in fact “mentions only 78 translated books in Lebanon from 1978 until now, while the Lebanese publishing industry is known to be the second biggest in the Arab World after the Egyptian” (Jacquemond 2009, p.5). In the same context, the NPT catalogue, which stands for “Nasserist Thousand Books in Egypt, [that] was the ‘National Project for Translation’ (henceforth NPT), launched in 1995 by the Supreme Council of Culture, an institution that depends, like the GEBO, on the Ministry of Culture” (Jacquemond 2009, p.12).

In the same field, West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland made an effort under the name of Australian Literature in German Translation: A Catalogue of Titles, Translators, and Trends 1789-2010) whereby they built up a digital database that included the German translations of Australian literature. This pilot project tried largely to approach different cultures through compiling the first catalogue of German translations of Australian literature, covering the period from 18th century to 21st century. West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland described that the translation has progressed to be an epistemological instrument to know the other. They assess the situation of Australian literature in translations, German in specific. Based on the significance of literature and translation in forming national identity, West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland (2010, p.iii) say, “our interest in carrying out this project has been less in the epistemological status of translation, rather, than in the massive empirical reality of translation history, positing this as a hitherto neglected facet of a nation’s literary history which calls into question the very notion of national literature itself.”

The previously mentioned project by West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland aimed to gather the single literary works in a database where they could be easily “accessible to educated, internationally networked, globally mobile and financially influential populations around the world” (West-Pavlov and Elze-Volland 2010, p.iii). The empirical Australian-German translation paradigm is designed to provide wide-ranging information about literati, translators, literary agents, publishers and cultural institutions who participated in the process of writing Australian literature and translating it into German. The result of this project is a catalogue of 3000 Australian-German translation entries over 221 years.

In terms of Hebrew literature, in his 1980 book Bibliography of Modern Hebrew Literature in Arabic Translation, 1948-1979, Amnon Zipin, the quintessential research library bibliographer with the invaluable combined knowledge of Hebrew, Yiddish, Arabic, Latin, and English gave worthwhile contributions to the field of translation, in general, and for the benefit of Hebrew literature in Arabic-language translations in particular. Zipin’s project is considered pioneering concerning Hebrew-Arabic translations. Furthermore, Bibliography of Arabic Translations and Studies about Modern Hebrew Literature in Israel and the Arab World is an Arabic study by Mahmoud Kayyal in 2003 that traces the development of translation activity from Hebrew into Arabic in modern times. It also sets forth onto the translation area as reformer of the gaps and as an expansion of the periods existed in the previously mentioned study. This is to say that this study includes the Arabic titles of Hebrew translation from 1948 until 2000. Similarly, in the year of 1988, Leon I. Yudkin edited a book, titled Modern Hebrew Literature in English Translation, wherein he focused on the importance of bibliographical control over translations. He also talked about the significance of maintaining and creating translation catalogue, so it could be easy to get and teach Hebrew texts in English-language translation. He also touched on the need of the Hebrew students and teachers in the USA for a systematic, methodological, and practical bibliography. In the same year, Issac Goldberg showed his synergism with the other bibliographers and edited the book of Bibliography of Modern Hebrew Literature in Translation, whose title implies the content. Five years later, Nilli Raz & Essi Kandelshein edited Bibliography of Modern Hebrew Literature in Translation, so they could follow up the trajectory of progress in translation and list the main translated literary trends.

In the same course, The Institution for the Translation Hebrew Literature (ITHL) was found in 1962; it is a digitized catalogue that holds the translation rights to Hebrew titles into other languages. This online resource includes fiction and poetry of adult and juvenile authors. What distinguishes this website is its advanced information about the prospective Hebrew literary works in other languages. By surfing through this catalogue, the searcher chooses available works and the additional data on the availability of translations in other languages. So, the researcher knows whether the translations of the existing literary works are completed or in progress (ITHL 2012, n.p.).

This is not the first attempt at creating a bibliography for Hebrew literature. The professor Yohai Goell carried out the first substantial attempt to create a bibliography for the Youth Department of the World Zionist Organization. On that, Goldberg (1988, p.4) confirms, “almost twenty years have passed between publication of Goell’s [Bibliography of Modern Hebrew Literature in English Translation, 1968] and Yudkin’s Modern Hebrew Literature in English Translation.”

Thanks to technological advances in recent decades, the online databases and dialogues of translated works around the world have started to take on a modern way of displaying the translation outputs. Concerning other online translation resources, they do not cover only the translation of literature, i.e. novels, poetry, memoirs etc., but they cover other articles and books pertinent to the translation fields of study. (HTS) stands for Handbook of Translation Studies Online by Yves Gambier & Luc van Doorslaer. For the main task, HTS takes on is the disseminating [of] knowledge about translation and interpreting and providing easy access to a large range of topics, traditions, and methods to a relatively broad audience: not only students who often adamantly prefer such user-friendliness, researchers and lecturers in Translation Studies, Translation & Interpreting professionals; but also scholars and experts from other disciplines, among which linguistics, sociology, history, psychology (The Handbook of Translation Studies, n.d., n.p.).

Next to the book volumes, HTS is also available as an online catalogue. This innovative and advanced catalogue is continuously updated, “and it now contains more over 29,000 entries” (The Handbook of Translation Studies, n.d., n.p.).

The Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs started to supervise The Japanese Foundation in 1972. It is indeed the only Japanese institution dedicated to implementing wide range cultural exchange programs worldwide. One of the tasks this institution took on was the establishing of the online database called Japanese Literature in Translation Search List Search. This database covers the Japanese literary works that have been translated into other world languages, mostly after World War II. Searches can be made both in Japanese character and Roman letters. The search method, this online catalogue adopts, is conducted either by the name of the author, or by the name of the text (Cultivating friendship and ties between Japan and the world, n.d., n.p.).

Dutch Foundation for Literature is a Dutch online database for translations which provides information on more than 20,000 literary works including fiction and nonfiction. It offers access to a range of foreign translations. This online catalogue of literary outputs contributes to the production and distribution of Dutch and Frisian literature at home and abroad. The people concerned can search for translations by the name of the author, translator, book and the publisher of the original or translated title. For example, when the searcher writes the name of the author, other drop-down and blank boxes become ready to be filled or chosen. These boxes provide additional information to limit the search to the desired results and save the time of the searcher (About the foundation: Dutch Foundation for Literature, n.d., n.p.).

In a similar field, the National Library of Scotland and the University of Edinburgh set up the Bibliography of Scottish Literature in Translation (BOSLIT) in 1994. The online resources are now available in MARC XML format at <https://data.nls.uk/>. It created records of Scottish literature translated into other languages and put them together in a considerable online catalogue. BOSLIT looks forward to meeting the needs of the researchers, academics, students, translation amateurs, other interested institutions and general readers (the Bibliography of Scottish Literature in Translation, n.d., n.p.).

The Finnish Literature in Translation database (FILI) includes references as well to access to more data on the translations of Finnish, Swedish and Sami fiction and nonfiction. The searcher can find the desired literary oeuvres by selecting on the search type from a down-drop box that includes “original title, translated title, author, editor, translator, publisher, year, genre, country and other inputs” (The Finnish literature in translation, n.d., n.p.).

Regarding the translation of song and aria texts, Finding English Translations of Vocal Music Texts guides the writers, singers, other readers and searchers to access to the searched-for data. This English online catalogue contains about 5,700 texts (Finding English Translations of Vocal Music Texts, n.d., n.p.).

Furthermore, UNESCO Literature Translation Programme: catalogue, and its main portal UNESDOC offer a wide range array of translations of different literary texts. The texts included on this website are not translated into one language; but into many. This online resource adopts a search method which includes blank boxes. So one can write the title, the name of authors, the publication years, document codes, ISBN/ISSN. It also contains check boxes that provide further information about the required text (the UNESCO Digital Library, n.d., n.p.).

The International Federation of Accountants (IFAC) is an international organization dedicated mainly to the contributing to the development of international relations and economics. This organization, whose website is available online as well, allocates a portal to the authorized translations by designating the translation bodies into 48 languages. The members of this organization launched this portal based on their awareness of the critical role translation plays in approaching different society and cultures. IFAC’s database works throughout empty checkboxes of languages, sources, years, potential completion of translation; whereby someone can choose some options to show the prospective required results (The International Federation of Accountants, n.d., n.p.).

According to this study, WorldCat, the world’s largest network of library services and contents, is deemed as another online catalogue that aims at providing access to the tremendous domain of library resources in the United States and around the world. In addition, some WorldCat’s libraries construct their own reference catalogues of entries. Thus, the user of this website can gain access to different articles, books, novels, short stories, etc., in their original texts and in translations, if available. The user of this program is required to write either the name of the text or the author in the blank box in the header.

In terms of the exhibition of translations of world literature, (PW) stands for Publisher Weekly, a website of brilliant works of translations. Three Percent and Open Letter Books at the University of Rochester founded the translation database of this website in 2008. It is an ad hoc resource to track all fiction and poetry published in the US in English-language translations. Thus, it makes all the English-language translation entries available for the persons and committees concerned (Publish Weekly, n.d., n.p.).

The other online resources whereby readers can find translations of different literatures are Three Percent, PEN America: Tools for Translators, PEN America Blog, InTranslation, About Translation Blog, American Literary Translators Association (ALTA), American Translation and Interpreting Studies Association (ATISA), British Centre for Literary Translation, Poetry Translation Centre, Language Realm, TLhub, Version Variation Visualization: Explore Great Works with their World-wide Translations, Don Quixote in English: A Chronology, Translation Conferences, to mention just a few. The most common purpose of these translation online resources is to encourage, further and disseminate to the public at large the translations of scientific and literary titles. Thus, bringing together the timely translations of different scholars in specific locations “lessens the efforts required to register potential data at later date, saving the time of the translation searchers” (Translation Resources Online, n.d., n.p.).

In general, all of the aforementioned translation catalogues certainly guided the process of national translations of national literatures in different countries of the world. In particular, the bibliography attached to Literary Translation from Arabic into English in the United Kingdom and Ireland, 1990-2010 report, WorldCat online resources and PW’s database are valuable resources to furnish the digital catalogue of the English-language translations of Palestinian authors. In the following subchapter, I intend to highlight some of the previous databases that show the participations of Palestinians in literary translation, which for this research a part and parcel of the general Palestinian identity.

4.3 Resources of Palestinian Literature in translations

This subsection of the study throws light firstly on the previous databases and catalogues relevant to the works translated into Arabic by Palestinian translators. It then goes further to draw out the major mission of this research at large. That is the say, it highlights the patterns, contents, and the significance of building up a database that encompasses all of the Palestinian translated works from Arabic into English from 1948 until 2019.

Nobody can deny that translation of Palestinian literature into English plays a crucial role for Palestinian culture and identity. It is also a way to present the sociopolitical life to others. On that, Mez’el (2014, n.p.) believes, “the Israeli Ehud Ben-Ezer feels compassionate towards the characters in the novel of Men in the Sun, and that if the Israeli politicians read the novel Death in Beirut, they would not attack Beirut” (my translation from Arabic). Nevertheless, translation per se plays no significant role if and only if the translated works remain without any systematic registration. In different words, in case of rendering a certain literature into other languages, this translated literature will be looked at from a wide-angle perspective by a proviso that it becomes known and systemized for the other.

With regard to the Palestinian matter, and as a way to defend its nation-ness, in his 1995 work The Palestinian Movement: From Arab Renaissance until the End of the Twentieth Century, Hosam Al-Khatib compiled “translations prepared mainly by Palestinian translators into Arabic” (Alhirthani, 2017; Khayal, 1998). In other words, “Al-Khatib's list contains 83 books translated into Arabic language and published in the State of Israel between 1948 and 1985: 36 from Hebrew, 25 from other languages (chiefly English) and 22 whose original language is not specified. This list, which is neither comprehensive nor up-to-date...” (Khayal 1998, p.6).

In his article in 2017, Alhirthani, based on the notion that bibliography can preserve the heritage of a nation of translators, produced a sample list of the works translated by Palestinian translators during the period of 1920s-1970s.

There are no any online resources to rectify the lack of information about such English-language translations for Palestinian literature that talks most about the Palestinian matter, in particular, and the Palestinian society in general. No serious attempts have been made to examine the scope of rendition activity of Palestinian literary works into English. In fact, Palestinian literary production is still adequately globally unknown, and its English versions are invisible to Palestinians themselves and the English speakers as well. As a result, this research gathered in one crucible approximately more than 1100 Palestinian titles of various genres.

More accurately, I constructed, via various methods and attempts, a digital database of Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019. This pilot project attempts to systemize the process of translating Palestinian literature into English and to raise awareness about the Palestinian literature itself, which stands as an advocate for the plight of Palestinians, who have experienced suffering in the last seven decades. It also aims at keeping the pace with the momentum of what has hitherto been presented in English-language translations regarding the Palestinian people. .

This empirical compilation process retains mostly the exertions of both writers and translators who spent their lifetime defending the Palestinian right via writings and translations that widen the range of such writings, so they could trigger a significant resonance throughout the world. As a result, the Palestinian cause, which has the largest proportion of Palestinian literature’s themes, would be too pompous.

On the other hand, some of the authors whom I asked to include their works in the statistical study and the database as well, expressed that some of their works are neither patriotic, insurrectional nor iconoclastic, but appeased with romanticism. Literature, apart from its content, represents however the nation wherefrom it emerged. Hence, the digital catalogue attached to this thesis contains whatever Palestinian literary works have been rendered into English since 1948.

This pilot digital task is designed to provide, in long term, information based on the author, his or her birthdate, the original works’ title, year of publication, genre, the place and the publisher, the English-translation title, translator, year of translation and publication, the place and the publisher and the number of editions. This information could participate to the improving of the reality of translation of Palestinian literature in English language in modern and highly oriented means.

One may wonder what uses this digital catalogue could have. In fact, there is really an exigent need for this database due to the following variety of reasons:

- a- This digital database could be a direct and easily-accessed entrance to the process of translating the Palestinian literary titles since 1948 until now;
- b- It could be potential resources to many educational institutions interested in the Palestinian cause in general, the Palestinian literature and translations studies in particular;
- c- It saves the time and alleviates the search efforts of the readers who look for whatever Palestinian literary masterpieces in English-language translations;
- d- It stands for the Palestinian cause by offering supportive titles to Palestine, and by shedding light on translators and consortia that contributed to the publicizing these titles and putting them in a wider-angle perspective;
- e- It gives way to the individual translators and formal institutions to look at the percentage of translating Palestinian literature into English compared with what has been written in Arabic over the last seventy years, so they could amend the shortcomings in the numbers of translations of certain Palestinian writers;
- f- It will be available in the future for further addition regarding the Palestinian cause, this could catalyze more translators and institutions to render more titles in English out of their belief that their works will be recognized and systematized, rather than being disseminated and quiescent on different websites inside the national paradigm;
- g- This database strengthens the rapports between writers and translators. It will be a robust base whereby authors can get the names of translators, in case he or she is interested in rendering some of his or her texts into English;
- h- This database helps the researcher to track the development of Palestinian literature in English-language translations through diagrams and charts.

This large-scale project does not only present Palestinian literature to a wider audience; it rather presents to the world the Palestinian nation and members of its diaspora. This project supposes a new transitional model, so it completely maps the patterns and trends in the translations of Palestinian literature across the English-speaking lands. At the same time, the database excludes all retranslations of previously published literature; it provides instead information about the numbers of English editions of translated literary works each. By this, redundancy could be shunned, and it gives readers and researchers a clearer look at new voices available to Arab readers, to see whose work has been translated in English.

If there are titles missing from the digital catalogue that are eligible for inclusion (especially those translated or adjusted after the completion of this thesis) feel free to contact me for addition and correction at Ramadhanhussam03@gmail.com

4.4 My database

This subchapter reconstructs the process of building my digital database on Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation from 1948 to the present day. I constructed this digital archive over the last three years. This digital database was built up concurrently with a course I took in 2017. It was based on methods of establishing digital catalogues for different areas and fields. It is also structured around photos mainly taken from the database. These demonstrate the process of adding and editing of entries and data on Palestinian titles in English-language translation. This is motivated by the conception of this digital catalogue as an adaptable, amendable online resource.

In cooperation with the e-Science Centre at the University of Tübingen, I was able to list most of the Palestinian literary genres manifested in the English language during the last seven decades, motivated by the idea that Palestinian literature and its English-language translation present a full picture of the life of Palestinians in Palestine and the diaspora.

This research's digital database originally utilized Microsoft Excel for initial ease of data gathering. The Excel spreadsheet covered data pertinent to the translations of Palestinian genres from Arabic into English, including the name of the source text's author, their birthdate, the original title, the year and place of publication and the original publisher. For the English-language manifestations, entries consist of the English title of the translated text, the name of the translator, the year and place of publication, and the number of editions.

On the establishment of the digital catalogue, I started to transfer the information contained in the Excel spreadsheet into the digital archive. The migration was motivated by the improved searchability of the digital catalogue compared to Excel, constituting an improvement of the end-user experience.

The project aims to develop a comprehensive overview of authors, trends, patterns, translators and publishers that are involved in the diffusion of these literary titles to the non-Arab reader via quantitative data analyses. It uses distant reading because the methodology offers a useful way of analysing great quantities of literary texts (Moretti, 2013; Jockers, 2013; Muhanna, 2016; Jänicke, 2016).

This digital archive was established using programmes, mainly MySQL. MySQL is a relational database management system. This digital catalogue was built incrementally along the semester 2017. I was able to construct the current database thanks to the assistance of Dr. Michael Derntl at the e-Science Centre of the University of Tübingen. Further, The computer engineer Fahti al-Hindi helped me to support my digital catalogue with a number of tables and diagrams, that could be for the benefit of to the searcher.

As a newcomer to the complex field of database construction I faced considerable initial problems. One of the two main problems faced was due to the inevitable comprehension difficulties one faces when instructed in a language (German) in which one lacks mastery. The second issue was a lack of grounding in the IT programmes used.

This empirical catalogue adopts means to store and display data on Palestinian literature and its English-language renditions. When the writer's name and birthdate are registered in order to list his translated works, there is no need to write their name once again. Thus, one can find the name of the writer either by name or by the birthdate.

In order to ascertain whether the publishing house published in Arabic or English one must select 'Literature' or 'Translations' from the top tab. Data can also be ordered by country of publication. For example, if a user seeks information on USA-based publishers of Palestinian literature, one can narrow down the search by adding the term USA to the blank box on the 'Country' on the digital database.. This digital database covers around 1100 Palestinian literary works presented in English language translation since 1948. It avoids redundancy. This has the consequence that if some one looks for a work translated more than once by different translators, the entry will appear once with different titles.

Diagram 6: Addition of a new entry on the digital catalogue

As demonstrated in Diagram (5), the poem The Dice Roller by Mahmoud Darwish was translated twice by two translators in different periods of time and under different titles. Henceforth, if the searcher finds any work under different English translation titles, it means that it was translated more than once.

Diagram (6) above shows addition of a new entry, by selecting ‘Literature’ from the dropdown box ‘New’ in the digital archive. Next the five blank boxes for the original title, publication year, author, genre, and original publisher need to be filled in. If the author name is not found in the dropdown box, the user should click ‘Create New’ to create a new record. The same applies to the ‘Genre’ and ‘Original Publisher’ boxes in the same archive.

Then, the user must click ‘Save’ to preserve the entries. To add data on the English-language translation of the work, go to the dropdown box ‘New’, and select ‘Translation’.

Diagram 7: Addition of a new translation

Next some blank boxes appear to be filled in. To connect the entry for the source-language title with the current entry for the title in English-language translation, input the Arabic title which is suggested automatically after entering the first few letters.

Diagram 8: Creating new records for publishers and translators

If the entry for “Original Literature” is completed, the further boxes; English title; translation publishing house; translation year; publication; number of editions; and the translator appear. If the names of the publishing houses and the translators are not already present in the database, select ‘Create New’ to create a new record.

In order to edit or delete an entry on this digital catalogue, select the delete or edit symbol on the left side of the entry as appropriate on, as shown in Diagram (9) below.

I created tables and diagrams in this digital catalogue that I hope are of use. These tables and diagrams represent the years of translation, the Palestinian literary genres found in English translations, the countries contributing to the publishing Palestinian literature in Arabic and in English manifestations, and the number of translators of each literary genre. Each of the following diagram is clarified and examined completely in the following chapter.

Diagram 10: Tables and figures presented in the digital catalogue

These tables and diagrams are continuously updated according to the data registered on the digital catalogue. Thus, these diagrams and tables will be suited to the generation of up to date visual presentations of the data.

Back to my Excel spreadsheet attached to this thesis, it provides the same information the digital catalogue does, as mentioned elsewhere in this work project. I began it by communicating with a group of Palestinian writers and authors who assisted me in gathering information about names and works. The appendices of Arabic-Palestinian titles and their English-translation manifestations grew more distant with each passing year. Each new piece of information I gathered concerning Palestinian literary titles produced in Arabic or translated into English language, was registered either on the database or in the appendix of Arabic-Palestinian literary titles.

My catalogue, whether printed or digital, performs the vital role of making Palestinian literature in English-language translation accessible to everyone interested in translation studies, English-language translation of Palestinian literature, and Palestinian culture. I hope that this resource benefits the Palestinian people and culture. In cooperation with the e-Science Centre at the University of Tübingen, I have endeavoured to make the resource user-friendly. Chapter 5: Statistical and Empirical Results

I consider this part of the study to be its cornerstone as in it I summarise the entirety of the research project. Here, I will not reiterate the questions posed in previous sections, rather, I will try to provide answers to them that are consistent with this study's findings and the existing body of knowledge about the subject. In addition, I present my findings on the quantity of Palestinian literary works from 1948 until the present day. Furthermore, I interpret the results so as to characterise the state of English-language translation of Palestinian literature since 1948, focusing on the years that saw an upward trend in the production of Palestinian titles in English-language translation, the Palestinian literary categories covered by English-language translations, the contribution of Palestinian and international publishers to the publishing of Palestinian literature in both Arabic and English, and the numbers of translators involved in translating each Palestinian literary genre into English. This section employs graphs and tables that visualize the results of the digital catalogue, titled Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019.

5.1 Palestinian literature in Arabic: statistical results

I have found that Palestinian literature production in Arabic is considerable in quantity. I base this analysis on the comprehensive statistical study conducted in this research project covering the number of Palestinian literary works in Arabic in the last seven decades. This study concludes that the current number of the Palestinian literary works in the categories of novels, short story collections, poetic volumes, plays, autobiographies, personal accounts or diaries, biographies, testimonial literature and prose texts books is approximately 6000 works published from 1948 to the present day. Appendix (2) of Numbers of Palestinian Literary Works in Arabic between 1948- 2019 contains the following information about Palestinian literary works produced in Arabic post 1948: the name of each Palestinian author, the number of his or her literary works in Arabic. This table excludes nonfiction works, including books belonging to the categories of economics, social sciences and education as they lie outside the scope of the present study.

Due to the lack of previous statistical studies, Appendix (2) also does not include audio-visual documentaries and films depicting the Palestinian situation, although they are best considered to be nonfiction literature. It has proved impossible to ascertain how many documentaries, films and nonfiction books have been produced since 1948 within the scope of this study. Some documentary filmmakers replied to my enquiries with the opinion that the scope of such a study would be greater than the attentions of a single researcher could do justice to.

I attempted to discover whether there are any reliable resources concerning modern Arabic-Palestinian literature on which I can depend in my study through use of the websites of the Palestinian Ministry of Culture as well as Wikipedia searches. The websites and Wikipedia searches do not cover all of the names and literary outputs of Palestinian writers, they do not even list most of the writers, especially that there are juvenile authors, whom I contacted through call phones, Facebook accounts and email addresses. Thus, the information included in Appendix (2) has been mostly gathered through personal contacts with Palestinian authors. I later used the digital archive of Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019 to derive the percentage of Palestinian titles translated into English.

5.2 Palestinian literary titles translated from Arabic into English during the last seven decades (1948-2019)

This research affirms that there no publicly accessible bibliography of Palestinian literature in English-language translation. There is also no institution currently collecting data on Palestinian literature in English-language translation. Therefore, there is an urgent need for a digital cataloguing project covering all Palestinian literary works in English-language translation over the last seventy years. In my attempt to build up a digital bibliography of Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019, I primarily made use of online resources such as Worldcat, Amazon, Free Verse and Poem Hunter. They had some shortcomings in their utility for locating detailed data useful for mapping the state of translation of Palestinian literature in English, such as the name of the translator and the years of publication and translation. It is for this reason I used the Facebook accounts and the email addresses of a number of Palestinian writers and the translators of Palestinian literature to reach the information necessary for the completion of the present digital catalogue. The data gathered suggests that close to 4.6% of Palestinian literary works were translated into English over the last seventy years. Depending of this study digital resource of Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2019, this part of the study employs Figure (1) below to trace visually the publication of Palestinian literature in English translation from 1948 to the present day; focusing on the time where the Palestinian literary works saw increase or decrease in English-language translation. In addition, the present subsection of statistical and empirical results uses below Table (1) that shows the Palestinian literary categories translated in the last seven decades. Table (3), which this subsection of the study employs, shows the portion of each Palestinian literary category in relation to the number of translators. The present subsection of the study also sheds light on the countries in which Palestinian literature in Arabic language and in English-language translation was published by different publishers, as Table (3) and Table (4) demonstrate. Individual countries do not publish literature, however I cast light on the number of publishers contributing to the publishing of Palestinian literature in each country registered in the digital catalogue of translation.

5.2.1 Number of translations of Palestinian literary titles from Arabic into English per year, 1948-2019

The data gathered for the present research project suggest that the translation of Palestinian literature into English did not start directly after 1948, rather, it began in the last two years of the first decade of second half of the last century; 1958.

Figure (1) below illustrates that there are great fluctuations in the years that witnessed the appearance of Palestinian titles in English-language translations. Figure (1) also demonstrates that translations of Palestinian literature into English show a clear upward trend, reaching over 235 in the last decade of the 20th century; especially after Salma Khadra Jayyusi's book Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature was published by Columbia University Press in 1992. This literary book includes English-language translations of the works of about 100 Palestinian novelists, short story writers, poets and autobiography writers. This literary output contains the contributions of 29 translators who were systematically and institutionally directed in the production of this anthology. I ascribe this increase in literary translation to the First Intifada which lasted from 1987 to 1993.

In other words, this research suggests that Jayyusi dealt with the First Intifada in Palestine as one of the political watersheds in the life of Palestinians, thus, she tried through her book to draw the attention of the world to Palestine and to that political turning point. In general, scholars turn to the writing or to the translating what is written when they want to make a certain issue better known. Columbia University Press, “which ranks on the third position within the world’s publishing houses” (the Australian Political Studies Association, n.d.) helped to make Palestinian literature better known for a larger audience through its existing customer base. When the publishing house is renowned and highly-rated, publications are better marketed, subject to more stringent editorial control and this combination of reputation and advertising reach increase the sales. Thus, readership of these publication will certainly increase.

The year 1996 saw the translation of almost 40 Palestinian literary works into the English language, mostly short stories. In addition, the 1997 marked the increased English-language translation in the numbers of Palestinian literary works to reach over 45 titles, mostly in the category of short fiction. This rise in translation in 1996 and 1997 is mainly due to the short story collections A Land of Stone and Thyme (1996) edited by Abdelwahab Elmessiri and Nur Elmessiri from Egypt and Modern Palestinian Short Stories in Translation (1998) edited by Izzat Ghazawi and Claire Peak. These two short story collections were collated with almost fifteen local and international translators whose efforts were motivated by their awareness of the significance of translating and publishing Palestinian literature worldwide.

The year 2002 saw the translation of 25 Palestinian literary works into the English language. Compared with the four previous years, a span over which a total of 27 literary works were translated from Arabic into English. The English-language translation output in 2002 represents an increase from seven translations in 1998, seven translations in 1999, six translations in 2000, seven translations in 2001 to 26 translations in 2002. This dramatic rise might be due to start of the Second Intifada in 2000 and could be interpreted that translators turned to Palestinian literature to publicize Palestinian cultural identity in that crucial period. In that year, Banipal Magazine contributed to share the voices of Palestinians through the publishing of 16 Palestinian short stories translated into English. Banipal Magazine was “founded by Margaret Obank and her Iraqi writer and journalist husband Samuel Shimon in 1998” (Tarbush 2012, para.10) and participated to publish Arabic literary fiction in general, as well as Palestinian literature in English-language translations. On that topic, Tarbush (2012, para.10) commends, “a key role in the transformation of the Arabic translation scene has been played by Banipal, the London-based magazine of modern Arab fiction.” In Addition, Banipal Magazine publishes contemporary Arab authors in English translation, no matter where they are writing and publishing. An independent magazine, Banipal's three issues a year present both established and emerging Arab writers in English for the first time through poems, short stories or excerpts from novels. Banipal occupies a central and crucial position in the field of Arabic literature in English translation and in the field of publishing translated literature in the UK in general (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.25-26).

This research commends the effective role Banipal played for the sake of the Palestinian question by highlighting the Palestinian-English translation titles published by it over the last years in the subsection 5.2.5 in the following pages.

There was another surge in the number of Palestinian literary titles in 2007. This rise was due to the publication of The Gateway to Modern Arabic Poetry (2007) by Munir Mezyed and Abdul-Settar Assady. The Gateway to Modern Arabic Poetry is an anthology including the works of more than 180 Arab poets of different generations and experiences. Including the 48 Palestinian poems in this anthology, the year 2007 saw translation of close to 58 Palestinian literary works into English. The other ten works are partially translated works published, such as the short story collection Mordechai's Moustache and his Wife's Cats (2007) by Maḥmūd Shuqayr, the novel The Image, The Icon, and The Old Covenant (2007) by Sahar Khalifeh and others.

2008 also witnessed a spike in the English translation of Palestinian literature when the website Free Verse collected works from Palestine in English-language translation. For this research, Free Verse made close to 70% of the translated works published in this year visible to a wide spectrum of readers. The number of works translated in 2008 was 82. For this study's author, the 2008 dramatic increase in the translating and publishing of the Palestinian literary works was due to the Gaza War in 2008, also known as Operation Cast Lead, and because translators in that period had the use of a website where their work could be publicly published.

In 2013, there occurred another spike in the translation trends, with 52 Palestinian literary works, poems in particular, translated into the English language. The 2013 increase is attributed to the contributions by local and international translators to the translation of 30 Palestinian poems in the poetry anthology Contemporary Jordanian Poets (2013) by Nizar Sartawi. In this case, Palestinian poets in question were grouped as expatriates among the work of poets of a neighbouring state.

The year 2017 had an increase in the number of Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation. In detail, this digital catalogue of the present study includes 95 Palestinian works, mainly single poems, translated into English in that year. Local and international scholars participated in publishing Palestinian literature in English-language translation worldwide. For example, the volume of poetry World Healing, World Peace Poetry (2018) by William S. Peters, The Year of the Poet (2017) by Jamie Bond and William S. Peters, and My Shadow (2017) by Nizar Sartawi introduced a total of 37 Palestinian poems to non-Arab readers. The first two collections include poems from various countries and the team involved in the writing of them strived to share the voices of poets from Palestine. Thus, these two poetry collections gave some Palestinian translators the chance to take part in translating poems of Palestinian authors especially submission is open. Through a conversation on Facebook messenger with the founder of the USA-based publishing house Inner Child Press, Peters (2019) says, "we do not select literary works [for publishing], submission of literary works is open." It means, the process of publishing translated literary works by Inner Child Press is easy and accessible, thereby encouraging more translators to translate more works into English.

To summarize, any annual increases in the translation of Palestinian literature over the last seventy years has correlated with political turning points in Palestine. It is also clear from Figure (1) above that growth in translation since 1992 in particular is not even but gradual, which contrasts interestingly with the political stagnation of the situation since Oslo 1993. As if the cultural efforts are increasing the more the hopes of a political solution appear to fade. The growth in the translation of Palestinian literature in the English language was also due to the publishing houses that brought to the notice of the world's translators more English-language translation of Palestinian literature. In addition, some individual editors and translators, like Nizar Sattari, William S. Peters, Salma Khadra Jayussi, Abdelwahab Nur and Elmessiri and others made laudable endeavours to improve the level of the visibility of Palestinian literature around the world in the last thirty years. Figure (1) above shows that some years witnessed a decline in the English translation of Palestinian titles compared with other years, such as 1992, 2006 and 2007. This might be for the reason that no major political turning points took place in some years of the last seven decades. In other words, it seemed that the political crisis simmered down throughout these years, thus, no efforts were made to translate Palestinian literary works that could present the life of Palestinians to the others.

5.2.2 Number of Arabic-Palestinian literary works translated into English by category, 1948-2019

The digital catalogue of the present research project demonstrates that the bulk of the Palestinian literary works in English-language translation take the form of single poems. For the development of English translations after the Nakba ordered by category of Palestinian literary work, see Table (1), which sources its data exclusively from the digital catalogue.

Table (1) demonstrates that 653 single poems have been translated into the English language since the Nakba. Anthologies of poetry are the most produced original-language genre in Palestine; about 2600 anthologies of poetry were published between 1948 and the present day. If the rate of translation by genre is proportional to the size of that genre in the original language, it is to be expected that poetry is the genre most frequently translated into English. That is, translators feel that poetry is the literary genre most frequently read by readers, thus “they [translators] seek to translate what is easy to publish” (Sattari 2019, n.p.). Translators in particular are interested in translating poetry due to its length and novelty to keep up with the newest developments on the socio-political scene. Poetry is the traditionally favoured form of literature in Arabic. It still maintains its significant position by virtue of the socio-political and religious subjects included in it. This holds true for literature from and about Palestine. The poem is the favoured Palestinian literary form due to its condensed length, precision and concision.

Palestinian poetry describes the Palestinian situation thoroughly (see Jayyusi, 1997; Abu-Manneh, 2016; End, 1997, Sartawi, 2019). For this research project, translators of Palestinian literature should take into account what matters to the English-speaking target audience.

That is to say, Palestinian literature in general has in-built a 70-year political issue, thus translators have to choose for translation the literary categories that they see the most frequently sold in the world's markets. Through it, the Palestinian cause included in literary works translated into English could be better known for non-Arabic speaking audiences.

The other reason for Palestinian poems to be the most frequently translated literary categories among other Palestinian literary forms is the possibility translation and the publishing process. Translators of Palestinian literature are generally not paid by official institutions. Thus, the translators of Palestinian literature tend to translate the literary category which is the least time-consuming and easiest to publish, especially seeing as the expense of publishing of complete anthologies of translated poetry, short story collections or novels is high.

The interest in Palestinian literature in general, poetry in particular, started after 1967. Other literary genres remained ignored. The demand for translating Palestinian poems rather than other literary genres can be attributed to a number of factors. A poem in general is short. Shortness of a poem makes it easy to be translated. Thus, we find translators who tend to translate single poems not a complete poetry anthology or collection. In addition, poetry is more influential than other literary genres. Furthermore, the process of publishing is easier in the case of poetry. The aim of translation is to represent our literature to non-Arab readers, and the Arabic-English translators always seek to publish their translations in the US, Britain, Canada, Australia, for example. Henceforth, we can rarely find publishers ready to publish what they cannot sell (Sartawi, 2019, n.p.) (my translation from Arabic).

In the Arab World in general, most authors seek to transform their literary outputs into other languages, English in particular. Unfortunately, translation in the Arab World is an unpaid employment. In this respect, Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p.7) affirm “literary translators from Arabic have to have other sources of income and literary translation is not seen as a viable career choice among students and graduates, with a main career required alongside that of a translator to earn a living.” Therefore, “the translators cannot dedicate their time to translate what might not be published or read by non-Arab readers” (Sartawi 2019, n.p.) (my translation from Arabic).

Concerning anthologies of poetry, Table (1) shows that 62 Palestinian poetry anthologies have been translated into the English language since the Nakba 1948. Some of the translated Palestinian anthologies of poetry are composed of different anthologies of poetry written originally in Arabic. Based on the data recorded in the digital database of the present project, 18 out of 62 Palestinian anthologies of poetry translated into English include poems from a number of different Arabic-Palestinian poetry anthologies, For example, the poems included the translated anthology of poetry Psalms (1995) by Mahmoud Darwish were taken from more than one Arabic anthologies of poetry for Darwish. The same for Music of Human Flesh (1980) by Mahmoud Darwish and Selected Poems (2013) by Ezz idden Al Manasrah in English-language translation, and others. We can also find that not all poems translated into the English language had been published at the time of translation. For instance, in the poetry volume Handala, Show Us Your Face! (2019) edited by Husam Ramadan collated poems that were translated out longhand. Some of the poems were translated in 2008, 2009, 2010, 2012. All of the poems included in this poetry anthology were translated individually by different translators, including the editor himself. On that topic, Sartawi (2019, n.p.) affirms, “we find translators who tend to translate single poems not a complete poetry anthology” (my translation from Arabic). That means that translators tend to translate poems that justify the effort of English-language translation. In addition, out of the 62 poetry anthologies 10 poetry anthologies were translated only for Mahmoud Darwish, including Music of Human Flesh (1980), Psalms (1995), The Butterfly's Burden (2007), Unfortunately, it was Paradise (2003), Why did you leave the Horse alone? (2006), Almond Blossoms and Beyond (2009), A Lover from Palestine and Other Poems : An Anthology of Palestinian Poetry (1970), The Adam of Two Edens (2001), Absent Presence (2010), A Memory for forgetfulness (1995) and another poetry anthology, entitled Victims of a Map: a bilingual anthology of Arabic poetry (1984) which also includes translated poems by Mahmoud Darwish, Samih Al-Qasim, and the Syrian poet Adonis. This research suggests that Mahmoud Darwish is on the first position amongst the Palestinian poets with the most translated poetry into the English language by Palestinian and international translators. Moreover, four anthologies of poetry by the Palestinian female poet Fadwa Tuqan were translated into English. Furthermore, four poetry anthologies by Ṭāhā

Muhammad ‘Alī got translated into English due to their themes of coping with successive political turning points in Palestine. The Garden of Azure Poetry, written in Arabic and translated into the English language by Munir Mezyed in 2016, is a huge anthology which includes many volumes of poetry. This seems to support observations that when an author is bilingual or a polyglot, he or she can reach a broader audience.

Table (1) displays 12 excerpts from Palestinian poems in English-language translation. I translated these excerpts in 2016 for my master’s thesis at An-Najah National University in Palestine. The thesis, entitled Religious, Historical and the Stories of the Prophets’ Allusions in Lotfi Zghlol’ Poetry: as a Rhetorical Device sheds light on the translation of religious and historical allusions in Zghlol’s poems. Through this work I attempted to find out a suitable way to translate allusions in poetry. On the digital catalogue of the present research project I sort them under the category of excerpts from poems in order to show the reader that they were only partially translated.

The official institutions should allocate funds for the translation and publishing of Palestinian literature in general. At a very least, in order to further this aim, the Palestinian Ministry of Culture should collect individual translated literary works and publish them in the form of compiled literary works rather than allowing to remain dispersed across different magazines and on different websites, which is in fact exhaustive to reach. This would bring Palestinian literature in English-language translation to a wider spectrum of readers.

The digital catalogue of this project also shows that 197 Palestinian single short stories have been translated from Arabic into the English language in the last seventy years. A dozen of these single short stories are collated in short story collections A Land of Stone and Thyme (1996) edited by Nur and Abdelwahab Elmessiri and Modern Palestinian Short Stories in Translation (1998) edited by Izzat Ghazzawi and Claire Peak. In the digital catalogue, it seems that there remain a number of single short stories on different websites and in different magazines that could be gathered in short story collections for print. Thus, non-Arabic speaking audience can easily reach them especially if highly-rated publishers publish them. This research holds that local and international translators did not haphazardly choose Palestinian short fiction as a literature for translation into the English language, but selected it purposefully as it “relied on offering life concerns, circumstances and social conditions like poverty, human relations, change of customs and traditions under the influence of new social conditions and sales or confiscation of land” (Assadi & Abu Saleh 2016, p.42). That is, works of short story fiction keep pace with everyday real experiences by means of distinguished literary pattern and style, and are “mostly a monitoring of reality, [thus], they can be described as the autobiography of the people” (Assadi & Abu Saleh). Some translators favour the translation of short narratives into the English language as it is short, its topic is direct and precise, and it does not require too much time for translation. All that has been mentioned about the Palestinian single short story in English-language translation regarding the themes, shortness and brevity can also be applied to short story collections. The only difference is that the publishing of single short story in English-language translations does not require money since they could be published on websites. The digital catalogue of the present project records 18 Palestinian short story collections in English-language translation over the last decades. Some of these short story collections in English-language translation are translations of extant Arabic-language titles. These include The Book of Gaza: A City in Short Fiction (2014) by Atef Abu Saif in English-language translation, Man and His Alarm Clock (2015) by Samīrah ‘Azzām in English-language translation, A Rose to Hafeeza’s Eyes and Other Stories (2008) by Muḥammad ‘Alī Ṭāhā in English-language translation, Palestine’s Children (2000) by Ghassan Kanafani in English-language translation, Mordechai’s Moustache and his Wife’s Cats (2007) by Maḥmūd Shuqayr in English-language translation, The Convoy of Thirst (2016) by Sanaa Shalan in English-language translation, Nothing but the Shadow and Other Short Stories (2018) by Rajab Abū Saṛīyah in English-language translation, Jerusalem Stands Alone (2018) by Maḥmūd Shuqayr in English-language translation and Father and Son (2010) by Muḥammad A. Sa‘īd in English-language translation.

The rest of the translated short story collections have no equivalent titles in Arabic as they include short stories from various Palestinian short story anthologies published in Arabic, such as The Internal Pages and Other Stories (2010) by Muṣṭafā Marār in English-language translation, Torn Body, One Soul: A Collection of Palestinian Short Fiction (2012) by Gharib Asqalani et al. in English-language translation, Wounded Birds Feature Stories (2003) by many writers in English-language translation, Loud Sounds from the Holy Land: Short Fiction by Palestinian Women (2011) by various female short story writers in English-language translation, Father and Son: Selected Short Fiction by Hanna Ibrahim Elias and Mohammad Ali Saeid (2009) in English-language translation, Three Voices from the Galilee: Selected Short Stories by Mohammad Naffaa, Zaki Darwish and Naji Daher (2009) in English-language translation, Short Fiction as a Mirror of Palestinian Life in Israel, 1944–1967: Critique and Anthology (1999) edited by Jamal Assadi and Saif Abu Saleh and Small Dreams: 14 short stories from Palestine (2003) by Ibrāhīm Naṣṣār and Majed Naṣṣār in English-language translation. Palestinian collections of short fiction comprise about one third of Palestinian poetry anthologies in English-language translation. The reason is related to “the supremacy of poetry over the other literary genres” (Assadi& Abu Saleh 2016, p.43). The translators and cultural institutions in Palestine should however seek the literary category the best attention-grabbing for the English-speaking audience.

Table (1) also shows that 57 Palestinian novels have been translated into the English language from 1948 to the present day. By reference to the digital catalogue of English-language translation of Palestinian literature, one can see that other 12 novels were written by non-Palestinian novelists, of which six novels by Elias Khoury from Lebanon, one novel by Ahlam Mostaghanmi from Algeria, one novel by Taysīr Sabūl from Jordan and four novels by Radwa Ashur from Egypt. I deal with these novels as Palestinian literary works due to their subjects that touch upon the Palestinian question, the Nakba 1948, the Naksa 1967, and the life of Palestinian expatriates in the Arab region. English-language translations of Palestinian novels targeted 29 Palestinian novelists out of the total number of Palestinian novelists. On the digital database of the present research, we thus often find that more than one novel by the same author has been translated into the English language. For example, in English-language translation Ibrahim Nasrallah has six novels, Layānā Badr has four novels and Sahar Khalifeh has six novels. There are many authors who have written more than one novel in Arabic, however, the distribution of English-language translations is not proportional and the privilege of having been translated into English has been limited to few authors. Either they do not have ties to a publishing house, or to translators or translation houses, they are incapable of paying money for translation, or their literary outputs were not deemed suitable for translation into English.

Table (1) also points out that 18 Palestinian autobiographies were translated into the English language post-Nakba because they accurately depict the socio-political life of Palestinians within and without Palestine. This research's digital catalogue shows that 10 out of 19 autobiographies were partly translated in the Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature (1992) by Salma Khadra Jayyusi, like Our Sun Will Never Set (1997) by Subhi Ghosheh in Arabic, Children of Dew (1990) by Muhammad Al- As'ad, in Arabic, Days of My Youth by Yusuf Haykal (1988) in Arabic, and others.

Additionally, Table (1) demonstrates that 17 nonfiction books have been translated into English in the last seven decades. Approximately a quarter of the translated Palestinian nonfiction books that the present digital catalogue shows, deal with the Palestinian political issue. The digital catalogue also includes other nonfiction books written by Palestinian authors, although they do not deal directly with the question of Palestine. English-language translation of these nonfiction books helps publicize them worldwide. It is important herein to indicate that the majority of Palestinian literary production after the year 1948 was a literature of diaspora and dislocation. Palestinian literature post 1948 is a thrilling quilt stitched with the harsh experiences of Palestinians, looming horror that afflicted the dispossessed and disabled Palestinians. Before the year 1948, "Palestine was a rich site of production of highly stylized forms of poetry, drama and even novels, but the Palestinian literary life came to an end with the advent of the Palestinian Nakba and the founding of Israel in 1948... and because of the Palestinian diaspora, and the discontinued lives of Palestinians, literature produced by Palestinians after 1948 was mainly a literature of Exile" (Saleh 2013, para.2).

Table (1) shows that English-language translations of other literary works, like, films, documentaries, plays and children short stories number 33. This research project's catalogue shows that translators of Palestinian literature pay more attention to the written works rather than audio-visual works as the following Table (2) shows. In my opinion, documentaries and films from Palestine are in a potential need of English-language translation especially with the cyber revolution. That is, we see that most of the people nowadays are mostly busy with their mobile phones and communication networks, such as Facebook, Instagram, thus, it would be serviceable for the Palestinian cause if translators tend to translate more films and documentaries on Palestine that could be easily and fast available for non-Arabic speaking audiences.

To offer an overview of the information contained in the digital database 60% of the translated works are single poems (translated individually not collectively), 18% are single short stories, 6.5% are novels, 6% are poetic volumes, 1.5 are short story collections, approximately 1.5% are autobiographies, about 2% include prose texts, plays, selections from novels, biographies, documentaries, testimonials and interviews, 1.5% are books of history and political description; 1% are excerpts from poems and 1% are films, 0.5 are children short stories, 0.5% are of unknown category.

Figures on pretty much precise and accurate numbers and percentages of Palestinian literature in English-language translations seems impractical due to a variety of reasons, like the non-cooperation of some writers with the researcher to get the number of their literary works in English translation and the inability to communicate with writers and associations that could benefit this research's results because there was no means by which I could contact with them. Nevertheless, I have done my utmost to account for them in the digital catalogue; by conducting a statistical study on the number of Arabic-Palestinian literary works between 1948 and 2019 and by collecting the Palestinian literary works translated into English during the same period (1948-2019). One could ask why this should present difficulty. I reiterate that the majority of the translated works have been translated individually. This research utilizes statistical data of Palestinian literature in Arabic since 1948 in general, and the statistical analysis of literary titles in English-language translation that are stored in the digital database. Henceforth, the percentages of the Palestinian translated works are derived from the general statistics of Arabic-Palestinian literary works. It means that I divided the number of each Palestinian literary category in English-language translation by the number of that category in Arabic language. As an illustrative example, the number of novels on Palestine in English-language translation is 69, as the digital catalogue Palestinian Literature in English-Language Translation between 1948-2009 shows, and the total number of Palestinian novels is 1355, as Appendix (2) of Numbers of Palestinian Literary Works in Arabic since 1948 until 2019 demonstrates. I divided 69 (the Palestinian novels in English translation) by 1355 (the total number of Palestinian novels), then I multiplied the result by 100 to derive the percentage. Through this, I could find the percentage of Palestinian literary works in English-language translation in relation to the number of Arabic-Palestinian literary works.

To summarise the findings: Palestinian novels in English-language translation represent 5% of the total numbers of published novels in Arabic, short story collections and other single short stories represent 2.5% of the total in translation, plays represent 1% and autobiographies 12%. Regarding poetry, this study finds that 62 poetry volumes and 653 individual poems have been translated into English. As an example of how I arrived at the percentages presented in these pages, for the individual poems numbering 653, I divided 653 by 80 (suggesting that each poetry manuscript includes about 80 poems), the result is 8. I added 62 (the number of anthologies of poetry in the digital catalogue) to 8 (the number of poetry anthologies resulted from the previous calculation), the result was 70 Palestinian manuscripts of poetry translated into English. Thus, out of the whole number of Palestinian poetry in Arabic 2.7% are translated into the English language. The percentages of works translated out of the total in Arabic for biographies, autobiographies, prose texts, testimonial books, and others are insignificant. In a few words, the present subchapter of this research project highlights the percentage of each Palestinian literary category in English-language translation to the total number of Palestinian literary categories translated into English since the Nakba 1948. I herein call on all concerned to fully explore which categories have been most frequently read by non-Arabic speaking audience. Henceforth, it would be potentially needed to redirect the focus of English-language translation from the Palestinian literary categories that receive the least attention from non-Arab readers to the most frequently read categories.

5.2.3 The numbers of translators of each Palestinian literary category translated into English, 1948-2019

The translation of Palestinian literature into the English language is not local work, it is international. This study estimates the number of the national and international translators of Palestinian literature into English. The detailed number of translators of Palestinian literature into the English language over the last seven decades lies between 220 and 250. Table (2) below focuses on numbers of translators of each Palestinian literary category from 1948 until the present day. Through this, we can perceive which literary category was the focus of interest to the translators involved in translating Palestinian literature into English.

Table 2 The number of translators of each Palestinian literary category translated into English, 1948-2019

It is clear from Table (2) above that translating of Palestinian literary works in the categories of poems, anthologies of poetry, single short stories, short story collections and autobiographies is a joint endeavour. For example, we can see that Table (1) above affirms that the number of Palestinian single poems in English-language translation is 653 since 1948, while Table (2) shows that the number of translators of this literary genre is about 866. Regarding Palestinian single short stories, Table (1) above indicates that 197 single short stories exist in English-language translation, and the estimated number of the translators of this literary category is 437. This means genre that either a single poem or a single short story was translated into English by more than one translator, such as The Siege (1992) by 'Umar Abd al-Raheem, Intimations of Anxiety (1992) by laila Al- Sai'h The Earth Also Dies (1992) by Muhammad Al- As'ad, One body's Transit (2015) by Ahmad Abu Hleiwa, The Windows (2005) by Zakī Darwīsh, Tears For Sale (2005) by Samīrah 'Azzām, or the same poem or the same short story was translated more than once by more than one translator, for example, the poem The Dice Player (2009) by Mahmoud Darwish was translated in 2008 by Fayege Oweis, and it was translated for the second time in 2016 by Natic Faraj under the title of The Roller of the Dice. But the digital database of the present project does not record any Palestinian literary work translated more than one time.

Palestinian anthologies of poetry in English-language translation number 62, and the translators 91. The reason why translators number more than the numbers of works in the respective literary genres themselves is because anthologies of poetry are long and need more than one translator to translate them appropriately and quickly enough to meet deadlines. Thus, for example, Omnia Amin and Rick London contributed to the translation of the poetry volume entitled Rain Inside (2009). This poetry volume in English-language translation is a compilation of five anthologies of poetry in Arabic of work by the Palestinian author Ibrahim Nasrallah. In addition, several translators took part in the translation of Mahmoud Darwish's anthology of poetry The Adam of Two Edens (2001) into the English language.

In English-language translation, Palestinian short story collections number 18 by 29 translators. If one goes through some of Palestinian short story collections existing on the digital catalogue of the present project, one can see that a number of translators contributed to the conveying each of them in English language. For example, Salwa Jabsheh and Naomi Shihab Nye translated Samīrah 'Azzām's short story collection Man and His Alarm Clock (1963) into the English language in 2015. In addition, Barbara Harlow and Karen Riley cooperated to translate Ghassan Kanafani's short story collection Palestine's Children (1978) into the English language in 1984. Furthermore, translators including Chelsea Milsom, Lauren Pyott and others presented a dozen of short stories from Gaza in English-language translation under the title of The Book of Gaza: a City in Short Fiction in 2014.

Table (1) above shows that the Palestinian novels translated into the English language over the last seven decades number 69. Table (2) shows that there are 88 translators of novels. As in previously mentioned literary categories, some Palestinian novels have been conveyed into the English language by more than a translator. For example, the 1974 Arabic novel The Secret Life of Saeed the Pessoptimist by Emile Habibi was translated into the English language in 2001 by Salma Khadra Jayyusi and Trevor Le- Gassick. In another instance of translation as a joint undertaking, May Jayyusi, Fedwa Malti-Douglas and Jeremy Reed translated Ibrahim Nasrallah's novel Prairies of Fever in 1992. Furthermore, Jabra Ibrahim's novel The Ship (1983) was translated into the English language by Roger Allen and Adnan Haydar in 1985. We can see that translators of Palestinian literature translate the works of the most renowned authors. For this research, Palestinian novels in English-language translation for example belong to those literati who are well-known in Palestine and in the Arab World. Thus, sometimes more than a translator cooperates to translate one novel, either because the workload is too high or because they seek to gain fame through translating the works of literary luminaries.

Table (1) above also demonstrates that Palestinian autobiographies in English-language translation from 1948 up to the present day number 18. Some of them were only translated into English partially. Table (2) above shows that translators of this literary genre number 30. For example, Fadwa Tuqan's 1985 autobiography A Mountainous Journey was translated in its entirety by Naomi Shihab Nye and Kenny Olive in 1990. I earlier stated that Jayyusi's book Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature (1992) includes 10 autobiographies translated only partially into the English language. Each of these autobiographies were translated by more than one translator.

To summaries, the digital catalogue of this research project suggests that translators of Palestinian literary outputs translate mainly the literary works in the categories of single poems and short stories. Such an orientation could be explained by two main factors. Firstly, translators tend to translate Palestinian single poems and short stories because they do not require hard efforts and are the least time-consuming, especially that the translation of Palestinian literature in Palestine is unpaid. Secondly, translators always seek to reach as many people as possible through their translations. In case there is no institution taking the responsibility to publish their translations, they consequently translate the literary works that could be published in magazines or on websites for free.

5.2.4 Publishing Palestinian Literature in Arabic, 1948-2019

Publishing systems are increasingly transnational with the industry having witnessed a period of mergers in the global publishing system. For this reason the present research holds the publishing houses in the world to be a reason to make Palestinian literature and the Palestinian cause international. The publishing system in the Arab World is sometimes in touch with other publishing systems worldwide. For example, the digital resource of this project affirms that some of the Palestinian titles have been translated through cooperation between the Publishers of Arabic literature and the publishers of translated Arabic literature into other world languages. In the year 2011, Büchler and Guthrie affirm that through collaboration with Arab Publishers some of Arabic literary titles were translated into English and published in the United Kingdom and Ireland between 1990 and 2010. In this respect, Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p.30) add, "Saqi's Beirut sister company Dar al-Saqi is a respected publishing house of literature from across the Arab World; UK Saqi is thus sometimes able to translate books to which Dar al-Saqi hold the translation rights and which they might not have afforded otherwise.” Back to the digital catalogue of the present research, we can see that there are three Arabic-Palestinian literary works (mentioned in subsection 5.2.5 below) translated into English and published by the UK-based publisher Saqi. These literary titles were already published by the Beirut-based publishing house Dar al-Saqi. Publishers of Arabic literature sometimes help Palestinian literati have the chance to participate in literary competitions held in the Arab World, such as The International Prize for Arabic Fiction (IPAF) in Abu Dhabi. This prize is designed to encourage the translation and promotion of Arabic Literature into other major world languages.

Regarding Palestine, the 2016 Arabic novel Fractured Destinies by Rabai Al-Madhoon was published by the Beirut’s-based publisher Al-Mu'assasah Al-Arabia for Publishing. In the same year, Fractured Destinies was the winner of The international Prize for Arabic Fiction (IPAF) in 2016. Between 2017 and 2018, this novel was translated into the English language by Paul Starkey and published by The American University in Cairo Press (AUCP). In the same course, Mureed Al-Barghouti’s autobiographical novel I Saw Ramallah was published in Arabic by Al-Markaz al-Thaqaffe al-Arabi in Beirut in 1997. In the same period, I Saw Ramallah won The Naguib Mahfouz Medal for Literature; a literary award given for the best written novel in Arabic. The winning Arabic literary title is then translated into English by (AUCP). This novel was translated into English by the Egyptian writer and translator Ahdaf Soueif in 2000 and published by (AUCP) in 2001. In 2019 the UK-based publisher Fitzcarraldo Editions selected ‘Adnīyah Shalabī’s novel Tafaseel Thanawye (Secondary details) for English-language translation. This novel was published in 2017 by the Lebanese Publisher Dar al-Adab. Fitzcarraldo Editions is now able to transfer it into English as it holds the translation rights. Henceforth, Arab publishing houses of Arabic-Palestinian literary titles assist in publishing Palestinian literature countrywide and provide them the chance to take part in literary competitions, which in turn promote them in English-language translation.

On the digital database of the present project, one can notice that the publishing houses of different Arab countries published the majority of Arabic-Palestinian literature because the target audience is the Arabic-speaking readership. Individual and institutional translators inside and outside Palestine later conveyed Arabic-Palestinian literature in English language, and various publishing houses and websites published its English-language translation in different countries. The publishing datasets of the digital catalogue show that approximately 440 local and international publishers contributed to the dissemination of Palestinian literature in Arabic and in English translations. Figures 3 and 4 below show the country of publication of Palestinian literary works in Arabic and in English-language translation over the course of the last seven decades.

I should indicate herein that Table (3) focuses only on the Arabic-Palestinian literary works that were subsequently translated into the English language, whilst Table (4) sheds light on the countries of publication of Palestinian literature in English translation. In the subsection 5.2.5 I present information about the top publishers of English-language translations of Palestinian titles in America, in the United Kingdom and in Palestine in particular. All three nations have the highest numbers of Publishers contributing to the publishing of Palestinian literature in translation worldwide. I display the tabulated number of Palestinian literary titles published by the publishers only in the countries that have the highest numbers of publishers publishing Palestinian literature translated into English. Through this, I can explain what drives these publishers to promote the Palestinian literary in English-language translations abroad. The remaining countries are those who have an international list of publishers that number less than nine in each one of them. I shed light on each publisher and the number of literary works published by each one of them.

This study focuses mainly on Arabic-Palestinian literature in English-language translation, nevertheless I have inserted in this subsection 5.4.2 a figure that demonstrates the countries where there are publishers contributing to the publicizing Palestinian literature in the Arabic language. Through this, I can distinguish clearly between the places where Arabic-Palestinian literary titles (only those that were translated later into the English language) were published and the places in which Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation were promoted to an English-speaking readership.

Table (3) shows that the publishing houses in Lebanon are the world's greatest promotion of Palestinian literature in Arabic language. Back to the datasets on the publishing of Arabic-Palestinian literary titles (those that were later published in English-language translation), which is a microcosm of the overall process of publishing Arabic-Palestinian literature, we can see that over the course of the last seventy years, close to 39 Lebanese publishing houses published 312 Arabic-Palestinian literary works before they were translated and published into and in English. Arab writers and Palestinian authors as well prefer to publish their literary works through the Lebanese publishers. On this topic, Assem (2015, para.3) explains, "I [Ibrahim Al-hendal] see that the good publicity of the book and the ability of the publishing house to sell and promote the publications could help the writer or the author become well known, and this is what the Lebanese and Egyptian publishing houses do" (my translation from Arabic). I attribute the interest of Palestinian authors in the Lebanese publishers to the large number of active publishing houses in Lebanon. More accurately, "according to the Syndicate of Publishers Union in Lebanon, there are two hundred active publishers in Beirut. From these, only two large ones print books exclusively in English" (Bissat 2012, para.3). I also ascribe this broad contribution of the Lebanese publishing centres to the publishing of Palestinian literature to the great number of Palestinian citizens in Lebanon; about half a million Palestinian people live in Lebanon. Among them are writers, poets and authors. Readers of the present project might ask: Two million Palestinian citizens are living in Jordan, among them also are writers and authors, so why is it a less popular country for the publicizing of Palestinian literature than Lebanon?

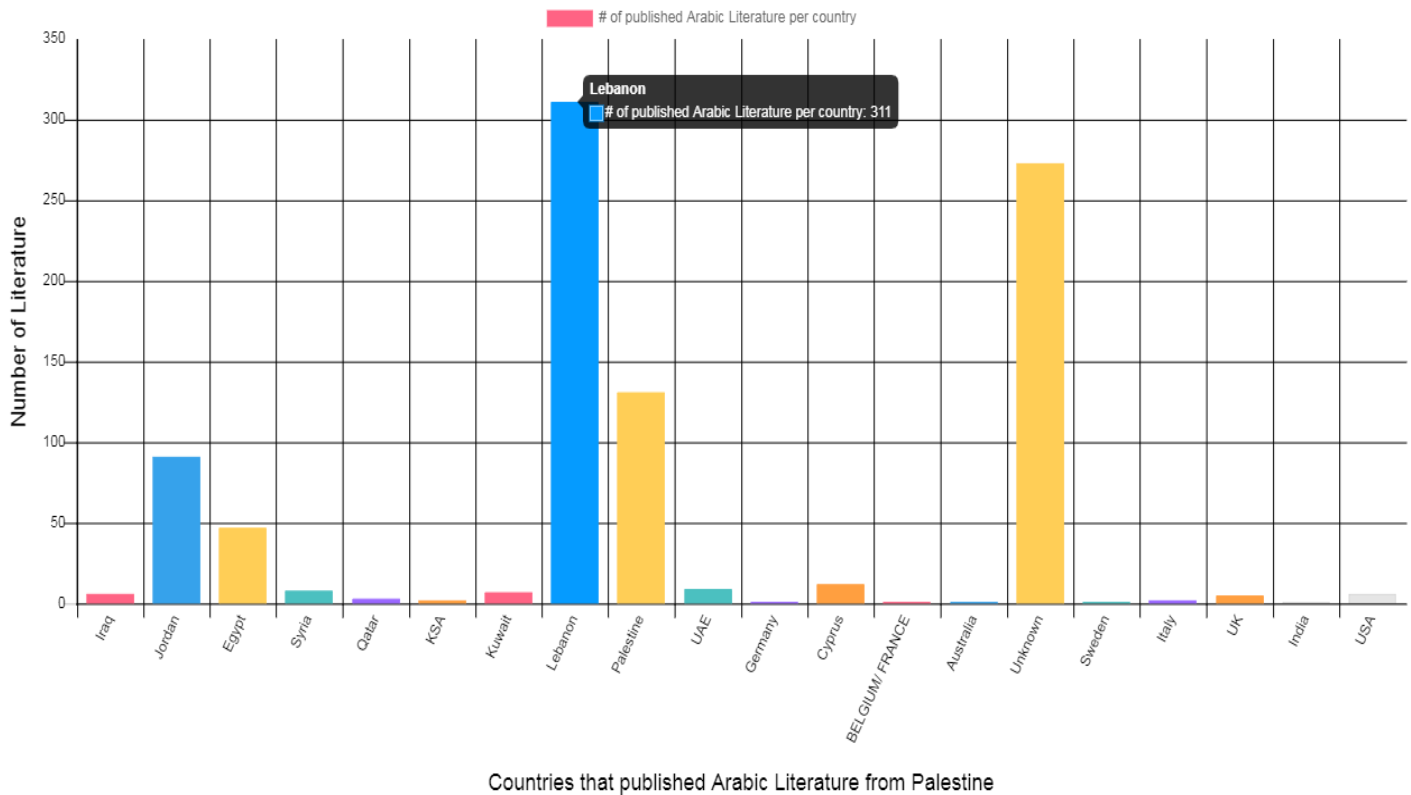

Table 3 Countries where Arabic-Palestinian Literature was Published, 1948-2019

Assem (2015, para.5) answers, “Fadi Zaghlout, Jordanian novelist, finished writing his Arabic novel A’rous Amman (Bride of Amman) in 2012. Later, he wrote to a publishing centre in Lebanon, as the Lebanese publishing centres are the most active in the Arab World. But no one wrote back. He then wrote to a publishing house in Amman which agreed to publish it. But it did not give any copy to any library” (my translation from Arabic).

This quote and other information I got from writers writing in Jordan illustrate that a number of Jordanian publishers do not commit to the publishing policies, such as distribution of copies to libraries and book shops and unpunctuality. Therefore, literati tend to publish their literary beyond the borders of Jordan.

Palestinian publishing centres rank second for the publishing of Palestinian literature in the Arabic language that went on to be translated into English. Table (3) and the digital database of this project demonstrate that about 46 Palestinian publishers published 136 Palestinian literary titles (from those that were translated into English language between 1948-2019).

According to the digital database of this project, 16 Jordanian publishing houses published 96 Palestinian literary works in the Arabic language (from those that were translated into English language between 1948-2019).

Table (3) also shows that 48 Arabic-Palestinian literary works were published in Egypt by 15 publishing houses. The publishing of Palestinian literary works by Egyptian publishing houses decreased lately due to the appreciation of the United States dollars against the Egyptian pound (1 dollar equals 20 pounds). Thus, if a Palestinian author publishes a novel or a book in Egypt, “it would be difficult to sell it as the Egyptian citizen cannot afford it. In addition to that, when Palestinian authors publish or exhibit books in Egypt, they must pay a lot of money for freight” (Zedan, 2017, n.p) (my translation from Arabic). Thus, we see that economic conditions play a significant role in the process of publishing Palestinian literature in Arabic. Political conditions and travel permissions as well restrict the publishing choices for Palestinian authors.

Table (3) above shows as well that 12 Palestinian poems were published in the Arabic language in al-Qassida Magazine in Cyprus in 2000. It also shows that seven Arabic-Palestinian literary works were published by six Syrian publishing houses, such as Dar Alyaziji, Mu’assasat Filasṭīn lil-Thaqāfah (Palestine Institute for Culture), Dar Houran. One of these works, entitled Self Criticism After the Defeat (1968) was written in Arabic by the Syrian writer Sadiq ‘Azm. I register it herein as it touches upon the Palestinian cause. On The Margin of Flutes (2001) in Arabic was published in Syria as its author ‘Adnān Kanafānī, the brother of the novelist Ghassan Kanafani, resided in Damascus until his death in 2019. Furthermore, the film The Dupes (1972), directed by Tawfiq Saleh, was shot in Syria with a Syrian cast to show their advocacy for the Palestinian situation. Additionally, the poem Dreams of a Butterfly by ‘Īsā ‘Adawī was published in a poetry anthology of the same title which was adopted by Mu’assasat Filasṭīn lil-Thaqāfah. Moreover, the single short story A Land of Stone and Thyme from the novel A Balcony over the Fakihani was published in Syria in 1982 when Layānā Badr was living there in that period of time.

Furthermore, Table (3) shows that seven Arabic-Palestinian literary works were published by three publishers in the United Arab Emirates (UAE), including Dar Noon, Jaeizat Fatma Bent Haza and Dār Qurṭubah. Seven Arabic-Palestinian literary works were published by the Kuwaiti publishing house Abdulaziz Saud Al-Babtain Cultural Foundation, the magazine Afaq’ and Alqabas Kuwaiti Newspaper.

Iraqi publishing centres, including Al-Hamal, Wazārat Al-I’lām, Dār al-Ḥurrīya’h, the Iraqi Ministry of Culture, and Al-Aqlam Magazine participated in publishing six Arabic-Palestinian literary works that were also translated into the English language. Similarly, some publishing centres and cinemas in USA, such as Three Continent Press, Koch Lorber Films, IFC Films published six Palestinian literary works.

Table (3) exhibits five Arabic works by Palestinian authors published by three publishing houses in the United Kingdom, including Riyadh Al-Ryes, House of Nehesi Publishers, Smokestack Books, in addition to a website and the Al-Majella Magazine. In Qatar, Al-Jazeera Channel contributed to the publishing of two documentaries on the political turning points in Palestine, including Israeli Terrorist Killed an Armless Caught Palestinian Activist and Al Jazeera World-Stories From the Intifada. These two documentaries were broadcasted in Arabic language with English subtitles. Bloomsbury Qatar Foundation published one novel by Jamāl Nājī. Two Arabic-Palestinian literary works were also published by the Arab Bureau of Education for the Gulf States in Saudi Arabia. Two Arabic-Palestinian literary works were also published by Dar al Mutawaset in Italy.

The rest of the publishing houses, including The Match Factory in Germany, Marisa Film and Les Productions Audiovisuelles in Belgium and France, Dar Sabīl in Australia, Ghayathalmadhoun official page in Sweden, Dar Meem in Algeria, The Cultural Centre of Vijayawada and Amaravati: Amaravati Poetic Prism in India published one Arabic-Palestinian literary work each. Unfortunately, the present research could not uncover the publishing houses of 273 Arabic-Palestinian literary works (those that went on to be translated later in English-language translation). Thus, this research digital database will be alterable in light of future information on these matters.

As we notice, Table (3) above includes new information that characterises the state of publishing Arabic-Palestinian literary works (that were translated later into English). This information would be for benefit of cultural organizations, educational institutions, Palestinian literature students, translators and publishing houses. As a result, I tried through Table (3) and the digital catalogue to shed light on the world's publishing houses, newspapers, magazines, websites that have made commendable efforts to publicize Arabic-Palestinian literature for Arab readers. The publishing system of Arabic-Palestinian literature is per se advocacy for the Palestinian situation, especially as Palestinian literature holds the Palestinian people's aspirations. In other word, if the publishing system in the Arab World was not cooperative with other publishing systems in the world, this would create opportunities only for a few categories of readers to read the literary titles woven from the hard socio-political circumstances of Palestinians. However, due to existing cooperation among publishers; such as Dar al-Saqi in Beirut and Saqi in London, Al-Markaz al-Thaqaffe al-Arabi in Beirut and AUCP in Cairo as well as other literary prizes, such as IPAF and The Naguib Mahfouz Medal for Literature, a number of Palestinian literary titles got translated into the English language. That is, the publishing system of Arabic-Palestinian literature gave the chance to individual and institutional translators to engage in the conveyance of a number of Palestinian literary works into the English language as in the previously mentioned novels Fractured Destinies (2018) by Rabai Al-Madhoon and I Saw Ramallah (1997) by Mureed Al-Barghouti's. Then, international publishing centres, websites, magazines and newspapers could take it upon themselves to publish that which has been thus far translated.

5.2.5 Publishing Palestinian Literature in English translation, 1948-2019: countries: publishers, magazines, websites

In this subsection of this chapter, I explore the distribution of the publication of Palestinian literature in English-language translation by country, as well as which publishers were particularly active in the making Palestinian literary works in English-language translation accessible for non-Arab readers from 1948 to the present day.

Figure (1) above shows that the translation of Palestinian literature into English started entirely after 1958. The first Arabic-Palestinian book in English-language translation was The Palestine Question (1958) by the Palestinian writer and translator Akram Zu'aitir. For years prior to the release of this book in Arabic, Palestine had been experiencing all forms of mass killing, devastation, replacement, detention. Palestinian authors such as Emile Habibi, Tawfiq Sayigh, Khalil Al-Sakakini, Samīrah 'Azzām, were also busy with writing and producing literary works commensurate with the political developments in Palestine. Years later, translators started to show little interest in the translation of Palestinian literature into the English language. The translation of Palestinian literature into the English language first began towards the end of the first decade-post-Nakba..

The publishing of a number of Palestinian literary work in English-language translation does not generally take long after the translation is completed. For example, the English-language translation of book The Palestine Question (1955) was finalized in 1958 and published by the Palestine Arab Refugees Institution in Syria in the same year. From 1958 and beyond, local and international publishing houses in different parts of the world began to publicize Palestinian literature in English-language translations.

Table (4) details the numbers of the published Palestinian literary works in English-language translation by country of publication. I subsequently highlight the number of publishing houses contributing to publishing Palestinian literary works in English-language translation. This research considers the publishing process of Palestinian literary works in English translation by international publishers to be a form of support for Palestinians especially that Palestinian literature holds a great national value.

Table 4 Countries of publication of Palestinian Literature in English translation, 1948-2019

I mean, if Palestinian literature had been translated into English-language and remained unpublished by English-language publishers, none of the readers would have been able to find out what is going in Palestine away from TV stations and news bulletins.

Ranking first on the list of countries by publishing houses publicizing Palestinian literature in English-language translation, the United States of America (USA) has about 40 publishers making 489 Palestinian literary works in English-language translation visible to non-Arabic speaking audience. A great number of these Palestinian literary works were published in Jayyusi’s book Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature by Columbia University Press in 1992.

I will next profile the top 10 USA-based publishers publicizing the highest numbers of English-language translations of Palestinian literature. The remaining publishers published only one, two, three or four Palestinian titles translated from Arabic.

Table 5 Palestinian Literature in translation into English: output of the top 10 American publishers of Palestinian Literature in English-language translation

The publishing house Inner Child Press was founded by Williams S. Peters and is a subsidiary of Inner Child Enterprises. Inner Child Press contributed to the publishing of 82 Palestinian poems in English-language translation. These Palestinian translated poems into English were published in a number of poetry volumes, including Palestine: A Conscious Poetic Offering (2018) by The Global Conscious Writers, The Year of The Poet (2016, 2017, 2018) by The Poetry Posse, My Shadow (2017) by Nizar Sartawi, and World Healing-World Peace (2018) by Global Peace Writers, Chyna Blue, et al.

Free Verse is an electronic journal which aims to provide a “forum for the wide variety of poetic experiments and work in various poetic traditions in America and outside North America” (Free Verse 2018, n.p.). This electronic journal includes dozens of Palestinian poems in English-language translation. Translators or authors tend to publish their works with Free Verse because it publishes for free and is well known.

Allpoetry publishes the works of poets. Some Palestinian writers or national and international translators of Palestinian poetry choose to publish Palestinian poems on Allpoetry because it publishes poetry publicly and is also a famous website. As discussed elsewhere in this study, most of the translated works are single poems, thus the poets find it suitable to publish their work on different websites because websites accept single works and publish them for free. Allpoetry offers also some poetry contests that offer prize money.

Another USA-based publishing house is Interlink Publishing Group. It is an independent publisher, founded in 1987 and based in Northampton, Massachusetts. It published 12 Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation, including six novels, two novellas and other short stories, three poetry anthologies, one autobiography and one short story collection. The Arabic-English translator May Jayyusi participated in translating four Palestinian works published by Interlink Publishing Group. It means that there appears to be a tie between the publishing house and the translator.

Action Book published 11 Palestinian poems written by the Palestinian poet Ghayath Almadhoun. According to the poet, the translator Cathrine Cobham translated them into English for this publishing house in 2016.

Peter Lang is a publisher specializing in the humanities and social sciences in the USA. It has many offices in different parts of the world. It was one of the world's publishers contributing to publish Palestinian titles translated into English. Based on the digital catalogue of this study, one can see that Peter Lang publicized eight Palestinian literary categories in English-language translation, namely six Palestinian short story collections, one volume of poetry and one single poem.

Syracuse University Press was founded in 1943. It publishes academic books in Middle Eastern Studies, American Studies and other fields of studies. Regarding Palestinian literature, it published four novels, two poetry anthologies and one short story collection in English-language translation.

The non-profit publisher Copper Canyon Press in the USA dedicates itself to the publication of contemporary poetry and poems in translation. The digital bibliography of the present research shows that four poetry anthologies and a single poem were published by Copper Canyon Press.

Brooklyn-based non-profit publisher Archipelago Books is dedicated to publishing international literature in translation. The research digital catalogue shows that three Palestinian poetry anthologies were published by Archipelago Books, in addition to other two novels by the Lebanese novelist Elias Khoury deemed relevant to this study as they touch upon the Palestinian question.

Other USA publishers with Palestinian titles are: Walker Publishing Company, University of California Press, Interlink World Fiction, New York Review Books, University of Arkansas Press, Boulder, Lynne Rienner Publishers, Grove Press, Harper and Row, Arab Film Distribution (WA), Vantage Press, Graywolf Press, Yale University Press, Curbstone Books, Purdue University Press, Picador, University of Oklahoma Press, Duke University Press Stable, Cowboy Pictures, East Lansing Michigan State University Press, Just World Publishing, Kino Lorber, iUniverse, AuthorHouse, The Operating System Press, Three Continent Press, Palestine Information Office, DoppelHouse Press, UABTA Newsletter, Medina Press, Life and Legends: Electronic Magazine, Association of Arab-American University Graduates, Bloomsbury. Other websites from the USA that published Palestinian literary works are The Electronic Intifada and +972.

Table 6 Palestinian Literature in translation into English: output per UK-based publisher, top 6

The United Kingdom (UK) ranks second among the countries publishing Palestinian literature in English-language translation around the world. Table (5) above shows that 156 Palestinian literary works in English-language translation were published in the UK. Regarding the general translation of Arabic literature, it has a prominent status and “tends to be a specialist activity in the UK book market” (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.25). Approximately 27 publishing houses in the UK, in addition to ‘Shubbak Festival’ in London and ‘the Edinburgh Fringe Festival’ publicized Palestinian literary works in English-language translation. Table (6) above includes the top 6 publishers based in the UK for the publication of Palestinian literature translated into English from 1948 to the present day. The rest of the publishers published one, two or three Palestinian literary works in English-language translation and were for that reason excised from the table.

The digital catalogue of the present project shows that 58 Palestinian literary works in the categories of short stories, poems, tales, interviews were published by Banipal Magazine. The London-based Banipal Magazine is of principal importance of “publicizing in print the literary works of Arab literati” Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p.25-26) as well as Palestinian authors. It provides non-Arabic speaking audience with a variety of Arabic literary works in English-language translation. In the same context, “[Banipal Magazine] has encouraged translation [by the] founding of the £3,000 annual Saif Ghobash-Banipal Prize for Arabic Literary Translation, awarded for the first time in 2006” (Tarbush 2012, para.16). Furthermore, Banipal Magazine “occupies a central and crucial position in the field of Arabic literature in English translation and in the field of publishing translated literature in the UK in general, being the only magazine which has systematically kept a finger on the pulse of the literary life of an entire region for over a decade” (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p.26).

In the short story collection A Land of Stone and Thyme (1996) by Nur Elmessiri (Editor) and Abdelwahab Elmessiri (Editor), 38 single Palestinian short stories in English-language translation were published by the UK-based publisher Quartet Book. Quartet Book is not only a publisher of Palestinian literature in translation, but it is also an important publishing house for general Arabic literature in translation. On this topic, Büchler and Guthrie (2011, 21) assess, “Quartet Books began to emerge as important independent publishers of Arabic writing in translation during the 1990s.”

The other important UK publisher is Comma Press specializing in publishing short fiction in English-language translation. Since the 21st century, Comma Press has begun to take serious steps towards proliferating the English-language translations of international short fiction. In this regard, Comma Press (n.y., para.1) explains, “in 2006 Comma Press announced the launch of a new translation imprint dedicated to delivering the best in contemporary short fiction, as part of Comma's on-going commitment to the short story as a unique and divergent literary form.” Regarding Palestinian literature, Comma press published one novel, two short story anthologies and nine individual short stories translated into the English language.

The digital resource registers nine Palestinian literary works in the genres of autobiographies, plays, short stories and poems that were published in English-language translation by Transcript Editorial electronic journal. In its 33rd issue, Transcript Editorial introduced to non-Arab speakers a handful of translated Palestinian literary works highlighting the Palestinian question.

The UK's Smokestack Books is an independent publisher of poetry. It aims at publishing unconventional poetry. The digital bibliography of the present research project shows that Smokestack Books promoted seven Palestinian literary works in English-language translation, including one poetry anthology and six single poems.

Saqi Books is an independent publisher located in London. It is widely known as a publisher of Arabic literature in English-language translation. On the establishment of Saqi Books, (Büchler and Guthrie 2011, p. 21&30) say, “it was founded in 1984 with the stated aim of printing quality academic and general interest books on the Middle East, and [it] began to emerge as important independent publishers of Arabic writing in translation during the 1990s.” This research confirms what Büchler and Guthrie, (2011, 30) discuss, namely that “Saqi's Beirut sister company Dar al-Saqi is a respected publisher of literature from across the Arab World; UK Saqi is therefore sometimes able to translate books to which Dar al-Saqi hold the translation rights and which they might not have afforded otherwise.” The digital catalogue shows that two nonfiction books A Country of Words: A Palestinian Journey from the Refugee Camp to the Front Page (2012) and After bin Laden: Al Qaeda, the next generation? (2013) by Abdel-Bari Atwan, and the poetry anthology Victims of a Map: a bilingual anthology of Arabic poetry (1984) by Mahmoud Darwish, Samih Al-Qasim and Adonis were published in Arabic by Dar al-Saqi in Beirut. The same literary works were translated and published in English by Saqi Books in the UK. Publishing systems are increasingly transnational with the mergers in the global publishing system as discussed elsewhere in this study. This digital database demonstrates that Saqi books in the UK provided eight complete Palestinian literary works in English-language translations. This research suggests also that five of these published works were published after 2011; after “the Libyan translator Khaled Mattawa won the 2011 prize for his translation of Adonis: Selected Poems-Saqi Books” (Tarbush 2012, para.17).

The remaining UK-based publishers contributing to publishing Palestinian titles in English-language translation are: ARC Publications, Taylor Francis Online, Verso, Arabia, Lynne Rienner, Atlantic Books, Vintage Books, Seagull Books, Pluto Press, Clockroot Books, Neem Tree Press Limited, MacLehose Press, Carcanet, Poetry Magazine, Duke University Press Stable, Aldiyar London, King's College London, Hesperus, Olive Branch Press, ASYMPTOTE and Heinemann Educational Books.

The digital catalogue also shows that close to 20 Palestinian publishing centres and institutions and four websites published a total of 107 Palestinian literary works in English-language translation as Table (5) above demonstrates visually. Table (7) below contains the top five publishers responsible for publishing the majority of translated titles in Palestine. The remaining publishing houses and websites published one, two or three Palestinian titles translated into English so were excised from the table.

To be precise, the digital catalogue suggests that 35% of the total number of Palestinian translated literary titles published in Palestine are included in Izzat Ghazzawi's short story anthology Modern Palestinian Short Stories in Translation (1998). This anthology contains 42 short stories by a number of Palestinian short story writers. The Union of Palestinian Writers in Jerusalem contributed to its publishing. It also publicized one poetry anthology, titled Modern Palestinian Poetry in Translation: 35 Poets edited by the Izzat Ghazzawi in 1997.

In addition, the Union of Palestinian Writers in Gaza published six individual short stories translated in a PhD thesis prepared by Said Abdelwahed in 2003.

Khaled Juma, Palestinian children short story writer and poet, established a website of his own to publicize to non-Arabic speaking audiences his translated literary titles. This website not only covers English translations, but also the French and Bulgarian translations of his Arabic literary works as well. Returning to English-language translation, Khaled Juma's website includes 13 literary works in the forms of single poems and short stories.

Al-Qasimi Academy located in Baqa Al- Gharbiya-Haifa was founded in 1989. It hold a preeminent position in teaching Islamic courses and in the field of Arabic literature. Al-Qasimi Academy published six Palestinian literary poems in English-language translation. According to the datasets of the digital database, Al-Qasimi Academy published literary works that were either written or translated by and for Palestinian authors. Therefore, only the works of the poet Fārūq Muwāsī from Baqa Al- Gharbiya were published by it.

The Palestinian Ministry of Culture in Ramallah published in English-language translation one short story collection, one nonfiction book, one film and two short stories from Palestine.

The Jerusalem-based publisher Ibis Editions is a small non-profit organization established in 1989. It aims to publish the Levant-related titles and seeks to present cross cultural translated works to eradicate discrimination between nationalities and peoples. In addition, it pays special attention “to overlooked works from the recent and distant past. Ibis is motivated by the belief that literary work, especially when translated into a common language, can serve as an important vehicle for the promotion of understanding between individuals and peoples, and for the discovery of common ground” (Ibis Editions, n.d., para.1). Based on the idea discussed elsewhere in this study that the publishing of translated literature, especially that which is overlooked, could be translated into a change of political sympathies, Ibis Editions (n.d., para.3) endorses “in short, we [Ibis Editions] hope that our books have changed and will continue to change the way individual readers think about this troubled region and about the lives and literatures of the people who live here.” Ibis Editions contributed one single poem, one novel and two poetry anthologies in English-language translation.

The other Palestinian publishers and institutions publicizing Palestinian literature in English translations are: Al-Feel Publications, Tamer Institute, An Najah National University, Al-Fajr Al-Arabi Magazine, Social and Economic Publications of Al-Quds Centre, Arab Institute for Research and Publication, Arab Centre for Contemporary Studies, Dar al-Farouq for Publication, Ogarit for Publishing, Palestine-Israel Journal of politics, Economics and Culture, Dār al-Nawrus, Birzeit University Press, Samir Mansour Bookshop, Words Without Writers, UNRWA, Bailasan Design, Dar Alhakeem. The Palestine-based websites of interest are: Palestine-Israel Journal, Makhmaret Almauz, Abdallah Tayeh.

Table (4) above shows that 49 Palestinian literary works have been published in Jordan by eight publishing houses. For example, the Jordanian Writers Society published nine translated poetry anthologies by a number of Palestinian poets as well as 30 single poems. The remaining Jordanian publishers published one or two Palestinian works in English-language translation, including Dar Azmina, Dar Al Karmel, Naseej, Yarmouk University Press, Al-Sayel Publishers and Distributors, Faḍā’āt lil-Nashr wa-al-Tawzī, Amwaj Publishers and one website called Free Thinker. In Jordan, the quantity of the publications of Palestinian literature in English-language translation is a credit to the Palestinian-Jordanian translator Nizar Sartawi who translated and published dozens of Palestinian single poems alongside a number of poetry anthologies such as The Lamp of Waiting (2014) by Rushdi Al-Madi, Their Blood is Rain (2014) by Aḥmad Abū Salīm and Narratives of Light (2016) by Jamīl Abū Şubayḥ.

Furthermore, two Romanian publishing houses, one of which is The Publication of Art-Gate Association and Institutional Culture Roman, published 45 Palestinian single poems and poetry anthologies in English-language translation. Munir Mezyed, Palestinian-Romanian poet and translator, wrote and translated the majority of the Palestinian literary works published by the two aforementioned Romanian publishing centres.

In Mauritius, the publication of the volume of poetry Handala, Show Us Your Face! (2019) by Husam Ramadan (Editor) allowed the publishing house Justfiction Edition to join the global ranks of publishers publicizing Palestinian literature in English-language translation. Justfiction Edition in Mauritius published 40 Palestinian poems. Whilst Table (4) above shows that only 35 poems were published by it, this discrepancy is because five poems were published earlier by other publishing houses. For this reason they are here attributed to the first publisher.

In Egypt, The American University in Cairo Press (AUCP) provided non-Arab readers with 12 novels that talk about Palestine or touch upon the Palestinian question. Non-Palestinian literati, including Bahaa Taher and Ahlam Mostaghanmi and Radwa Ashur, wrote three of the published novels. AUCP also published one Palestinian short story entitled, Refugee by Aref Al- Azouni (n.d.). In addition, one anonymous publisher in Egypt published a novel, titled The Crossing (2006) by Ziyād ‘Abd al-Fattāḥ. Many Arab writers hoping to have their literary works translated into English wish to publish them with the American University in Cairo Press (AUCP) because “out of 523 institutions that are accredited worldwide by Middle States Commission on Higher Education (MSCHE), only 17, including AUC- are outside the United States” (The American University in Cairo, n.d., n.p). UAC is the only university in Egypt that holds that accreditation. In addition, AUCP is leading the Arab World’s publishing houses in the area of publishing Arabic literature in English-language translations. In this regard, Büchler and Guthrie (2011, p.25) say, “the American University in Cairo Press is clearly a leader in the field with their policy of systematic publication of contemporary Arabic literature in English translation.” Furthermore, all of the Arab writers, novelists and poets hope through their translated titles to reach as many non-Arabic speaking readers as possible. According to the 2011 report entitled Literary Translation from Arabic into English in the United Kingdom and Ireland, 1990-2010 and prepared by the two authors Büchler and Guthrie under the Euro-Mediterranean Translation Programme, it was found that close to 110 Arabic titles were published by AUCP within the period covered by this report. This result gives AUCP a high rank amongst the world’s publishers. Some of the novels recorded on the digital catalogue and published by AUC were award-winning before they were translated into English and published, such as I Saw Ramallah (1997) by Mureed Al-Barghouti and Fractured Destinies (2018) Rabai Al-Madhoon. So, AUCP is often responsible for the English-language translation and publication of award winning Arabic-literary works.

Table (4) above shows that four Palestinian nonfiction books in English-language translation were published in Lebanon. Two Lebanese publishers, including Khayat's College Book Cooperative and Zaytouna Centre for Studies & Consultations published books that talk about the socio-political life of the Palestinian citizens within and without Palestine. The publisher Zaytouna Centre for Studies & Consultations focuses on the Palestinian issue and the conflict with Israel as well as Arab, Islamic, regional and international developments. Furthermore, one poetry anthology in English-language translation was published by Dar al-Awda in Beirut. Table (5) also displays six Palestinian short stories published in Malta by FARAXA in English-language translation. FARAXA normally publishes with the aim of publicizing literary and non-literary translations.

In Spain, The University of Seville published three Palestinian single poems and one Palestinian single short story in English-language translation. In Qatar, two documentaries on the Palestinian socio-political developments were published with subtitles in English by Al-Jazeera Channel, in addition to two novels published by Bloomsbury Qatar Foundation Publishing (BQFP), which was established as a result of the interest in the translation of Arabic fiction into English. That means,

The interest in translated Arabic fiction has encouraged the setting up of new publishing ventures in the past few years. A prime example is Bloomsbury Qatar Foundation Publishing (BQFP), founded jointly by London-based Bloomsbury Publishing and the Qatar Foundation. Bloomsbury Qatar Foundation Publishing has been publishing in both Arabic and in English translation since 2008, as well as setting up training sessions, mentoring and internships (Tarbush, 2012; Holland, 2011).

This research commends the international efforts made for the sake of the English-language translation and publication of Arabic literary titles, especially that this cooperation targeted some Palestinian literary products.

In Germany, four Palestinian literary works in English-language translation were published by three publishers, JustFiction Edition, The Match Factory and Noor Publishing.

Table (4) demonstrates that three Palestinian literary works published by three Syrian publishers, including The General Institution for Cinema, Don Quijote Publishing and Distribution and Palestine Arab Refugees Institution. Equally, three other Palestinian long poems in English-language translation were published by the Kuwaiti publisher Abdulaziz Saud Al-Babtain Cultural Foundation. These poems are included in the anthology The Arab Epics for Peace (2018). The team involved in the translation and publishing of this book asked each writer to send a poem without a title. Thus, the digital catalogue includes no equivalent Arabic titles for these poems.

The remaining Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation were published by Canadian publishers, such as York Press, and by Australian publishing centres, such as Papyrus Pub and Al Muthaqaf al Arabi Institution. Unfortunately, the present research could not figure out the publishers for 135 Palestinian literary works in English-language translation. So, one finds them under the name of “Unknown” in Table (4) above. I hope readers with information that fills gaps in the digital database pass it on to me so that I can amend the database to present a clearer and more reliable picture of Palestinian literary titles in English-language translation.

All of the diagrams and figures above can be found on the digital database on modern Palestinian literature in English-language translation over the last seven decades. In the absence of previous resources that document Arabic-Palestinian literature published after 1948, the task of figuring out the exact number of the Palestinian literary creations thus far rendered into English was arduous. That others may harvest the fruits of this labour, I have built this ground-breaking digital resource for Palestinian literature in English-language translation from which the key data pertinent to the process of the translation of Palestinian literature into English can be extracted, and where all the works that had been translated and those that will be translated into English in the future can be registered. It is significant to note that this digital resource for Palestinian literature will be on-going and open for the information concerning any translated works in the future, such that one will be able to trace the process of translating Palestinian literature in English in the past and in the future. Consequently, one can conduct further research in this field of study as the research project's author considers Palestinian literature a fair way to uncover the life of Palestinian citizens especially for those who seek to know more about the Palestinian society.

The number of Palestinian literary works rendered into English in the present digital resource is misleading as the overwhelming bulk of the translated works is constituted of individual poems and short stories. The main task of the present digital database is to trace the process of translating and publishing Palestinian literature in the last seven decades; since the establishment of the state of Israel. It also shows the number of the English-language translations of Palestinian literature. Thus, other stakeholders and translation organizations can follow it up to take necessary actions to implement the recommendations relevant Palestinian literature in English-language translation. The results extracted from the digital database are unexpected. For example, I had not suspected that the English-language translation of Palestinian literature began only in 1958. I thought that translators from Arabic into English began translating Palestinian literary titles before 1948 to change international perceptions of Palestine and to introduce the lives of Palestinians to the non-Arabic speaking audiences. Nor did I think that little work on the English-language translation of Palestinian literature occurred between 1958 and 1991, especially a number of developments took place on the political scene, such as the 1967 war and Sabra and Shatila massacre in 1982, during that time period, which would have seen an increase in translation if the spikes in translation corresponding to geopolitical events from 1992 onwards had been generalizable.

This study's catalogued data also demonstrate that most of the translated works are the work of a small number of Palestinian writers. The translation information this database contains is of the same idea of Al-Omary (2010, p. 276) that "translation in the Arab World is mostly run individually not institutionally." Translators, particularly in Palestine, translate literary works into the English language without any institutional guidance. I found that some of the Palestinian literary works contained in the digital catalogue were translated either by the writers themselves as he or she was bilingual, such as the works of Munir Mezyed and Nizar Sartawi, or "through the acquaintance of translators and writers for the translation of single literary titles" Sartawi (2019, n.p), or through translators paying for translation out of personal funds. Thus, this research recommends that the English-language translation of Palestinian literature should be dealt systematically and oriented institutionally. By doing so this, the publishing of the translated outcome will be also more systematic and more available for non-Arab readers. In other word, we saw that the English-language translation of the anthologies of poetry and short story collections, such as Anthology of Modern Palestinian Literature (1992) by Salma Khadra Jayyusi and Modern Palestinian Short Stories in Translation (1998) by Izzat Ghazzawi and Claire Peak was conducted through cooperation among translators. Therefore, such works are globally distributed. The best example of this is that both of the aforementioned anthologies are available in the University Library of Tübingen.

This subsection project partially contradicts some authors who attributed the problems of translations only to intermittent funding. The inadequacies of the funding climate are certainly a factor; but this database shows that for the works of a select group of Palestinian writers, like Mahmoud Darwish, Ghassan Kanafani, and Sahar Khalifeh, Layānā Badr funding is not an issue. This is because of their literary reputation. We cannot deny that their literary pieces are worthy of translation, but there are also other writers and poets who produce literary works worthy of translation into English. It is also a matter of quality; only the well-known writers get translated.

Interest in literary works coming from Palestine in English-language translations is often determined by political affiliation rather than by the desire to discover the literary culture of Palestine, especially if the translation institution is Palestinian. As an example of how political affiliation affects the process of translation, Mahmoud Darwish's poems are translated into more than 20 languages, while none of the works of many other Palestinian poets and writers has been translated into even one language. It is herein important to say that Mahmoud Darwish and Ghassan Kanafani, for example, were members of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO), and this earned them popularity among the readers and translators. For example, the 148-page translation report Literary Translation from Arabic into English in the United Kingdom and Ireland, 1990-2010 (2011) affirms that Mahmoud Darwish ranks third amongst Arab writers with the most translated literary outcome into the English language in the last decade of the 20th century and the first ten years of the 2000s.

In conclusion, the digital database of this project consists of primary authorship and translation information about Palestinian literature since 1948 until nowadays. According to the digital catalogue of the present research project, this subsection traces the English-language translation and publication of the Palestinian literary titles over the last seven decades. It also visualizes the most frequently translated literary categories among other Palestinian literary forms. In addition, it points out the efforts aiming at producing literary titles in English-language translation. Furthermore, it mentions the countries as well as the publishers that have published Palestinian literature in the Arabic language and in English-language translation since 1948 until the time of writing (i.e. late 2019). Through this, interested researchers can draw on this comprehensive resource for potential research papers. Further literary research could be conducted with the aim of obtaining an overall statistical picture for documentary films, as a type of literature, and books that touch upon Palestine and Palestinian life. Unfortunately, the percentage of Palestinian books and audio-visual documentaries and films that talk about the Palestinian socio-political life and issue translated in English-language translation since 1948 could not be obtained for this study. Thus, this project can only be completed by future researchers. I hold the opinion that the breadth of literature translated into English should be increased because it is a way to publicize the cause of Palestine. Therefore, efforts should be continued and increased to further the publication of more institutionally oriented English-language translations of Palestinian literature that bring a greater breadth of perspective on the Palestinian culture and question to international audiences.

Chapter 6: Conclusion

6.1 Restatement

In this last chapter, I would like to round off my thorough work and bring it to an end. I would like also to report my research results, especially now that the database entries, upon which this study depends, are available. As previously indicated, the key task of this research is the construction of an archive that comprehensively shows the reality of Palestinian literature in English-language translation, by use of a new method of data analysis. I aimed to clear up any ambiguities and misconceptions created by the absence of reliable and comprehensive statistics for Palestinian literature in Arabic; which in the end gives an overall image of the number of Palestinian literature produced and published since 1948 until the time of writing (i.e. late 2019), and by the absence of an easily accessible source on English translations of that literature that ultimately highlights the extent of the world's attention in Palestinian literature. This part of the study seeks to answer the questions I raised in the introduction, regarding to the quantity of Palestinian literary output in the last seven decades, the place of publication, the translators, years of publication, and the percentage of Palestinian literature translated into English. This chapter consists of subchapters that present my suggested solutions for the main problems faced by the lack of real information and the absence of dependable sources (6.2.1), acknowledge the main limitations of the study that led to unexpected results (6.2.2), suggest further areas of research from the results of the study and their implications (6.3), and address the relevant authorities and stakeholders possibly able to act on the recommendations of the present research project (6.4).

6.2 Findings and limitations

This subsection briefly reports up to date findings and results on the topic of modern Palestinian authors in English translation. It also throws light on the importance of these findings. It also investigates who is interested in Palestinian literature and helps it not to be esoteric anymore. I conclude this subsection by indicating the limitations encountered when I delved deeper into the sources and upon finding more translated works to register.

6.2.1 Findings

This research hinges upon other previous articles and research papers, either to refute or confirm practically what has already been reported about Palestinian literature and English translation. In fact, this study joins other studies in regarding literature as a tool for defending people persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislations. Additionally, it seeks to associate itself with earlier research that presented literature as a documentary account of everyday life that thereby highlights suffering and inequality. In the light of the disparity in the balance of power between Palestine and the Israeli people, this research sees Palestinian literature, in its translated manifestation, an influential means for the realization of national hopes and of informing a global audience of the socio-political reality.

This study finds Arabic-Palestinian literary production significant to the Palestinian socio-political issue as is attested by the approximately 6000 works, including novels, short story collections, poetry volumes, plays, autobiographies, biographies, testimonials, diaries, books of prose texts that have been produced in across the world over the last seven decades. This study has dealt with the digital bibliography as a thumbnail of Palestinian literature in Arabic language as well. In other words, the data included on the digital catalogue on Palestinian literature in Arabic language, its publishers, titles and years of publishing provides an image of Palestinian literature. For example, most of the translated Palestinian works are single poems and single short stories taken from poetry and short story anthologies that were published by publishing houses mostly registered on the digital database. Years of publishing, that represent that Palestinian literature deals with issues after the Nakba 1948 mainly, is a proof that Palestinian literature in general is socio-politically centred. Others might say that there are still large numbers of Palestinian literary works not translated in English language and no available information on them are existing on the digital catalogue. I herein try to project a general image of Palestinian literature in Arabic regarding the authors, years of publishing and the publishers. Thus, it has revealed that Palestinian literary works in Arabic had been published in about 20 Arab and non-Arab countries before they were translated into the English language. For this research project, the process of publishing Palestinian literature by different publishing houses in different countries is a form support for the Palestinian issue. Henceforth, this study goes hand in hand with other research papers that commend the great role the publishing process plays in advocating the disempowered peoples in particular.

This study stands side by side with other researchers' opinions about the role of translations in the transmission of the truth and promoting the goals of literature globally. Via the datasets included in the digital catalogue, this research proves beyond doubt what other researchers including, Büchler and Guthrie (2011), Jacquemond (2009), El-Komi, (2017), Nassar (2011), Shosheh (2015), and Jayyusi (2007) have already reported about the slow growth of English translations of Palestinian literature which is an integral part of general Arabic literature.

In addition, despite of the awareness of Palestinian scholars of the significance of literature to their on-going issue, and the contributions of translation to making their voices heard globally, none of them tried to collect them in one catalogue. For this reason I constructed a digital resource for English translations that comprehensively covers the translated titles in English with the help of which I, practitioners, and other stakeholders involved in the field of Palestinian literature and its translation can gain an overview of the development of Palestinian literature in English-language translation over the last seven decades.

This digital database serves as a practical demonstration of whether English translations of Palestinian literature are in tremendous or small amount. Which means, the datasets the catalogue encompasses are a conclusive evidence of the size of English translation of Palestinian literature. The digital database of the present project found out that Palestinian novels in English-language translations represent 5% of the general number of Palestinian novels produced in Arabic since 1948, short story collections and single short stories are 2.5%, plays are 1%, autobiographies are 12%, single poems and poetry anthologies are 2.7% as also indicated the entries I have hitherto registered. I get this figure through dividing the number of each translated literary genre existing on the digital database on the general number of each genre in Arabic provided in a statistical of Arabic-Palestinian literary works at the end of this study. Thus, the translated Palestinian literary works from 1948 until the time of writing (i.e. late 2019) represent approximately 4.6%. According to the digital catalogue, I confirm that the most-translated Palestinian literary type in English is the single poems (653 single poems) followed by single short stories (197), volumes of poetry (62), then novels (69), autobiographies (18) and short story collections (18), socio-political books (17), excerpts from poems (12), selections from novels (5) films (9), documentaries (6), prose texts (4), plays and play book (4), interviews (2), biographies (2) and testimonials (1).

Further, this digital catalogue found out that about 250 translators, 438 publishing houses and websites in about 20 countries furthered the English translation of Palestinian literature and raised the international profile of the issue.

Additionally, the result of this project is a catalogue of 1100 Palestinian-English translation entries over 70 years. The years of translation are known for approximately 1000 of them, while years of translation of the remaining works are still unknown.

The findings of this research regarding translation of Palestinian literature in English language are not a dead letter; they are, however, facts influencing literature in general and the Palestinian question in particular. In other words, the more English translations Palestinian literature obtains, the more advocacies the Palestinian issue will receive (see Jayyusi, 1992; Alhirthani, 2017; Farag, 2018). Henceforth, according to the sobering results the digital catalogue produced, I have begun to petition the Palestinian Ministry of Culture, relevant authorities, publishing houses, and translation institutions, independent translators, and other national and international amateurs to intensify efforts to ameliorate the very low level of Palestinian authors in English translations. In addition, I call on other English-language publishers to take on the responsibility to promote more Palestinian titles in English translation since they bring the hopes and aspirations of Palestinians.

Nevertheless, due to the variety of limitations I have encountered, the digital database is not without drawbacks. This study correspondingly calls upon other users of the digital catalogue to contribute to the filling in of the gaps, and to the adjusting of the data required to follow up the developments in the Palestinian literary arena.

6.2.2 Limitations of the study

I acknowledge limitations directly resulting from constraints in the methodology and research design in the following subsections. I acknowledge the weaknesses have affected this research paper. I am also aware that these limitations have affected the accuracy and comprehensiveness of the datasets. In identifying them in this subsection, I hope to draw attention to some of the flaws of this thesis and to provide opportunity to other researchers to correct these deficiencies, opening the door for further studies.

I discuss herein the most significant hurdles that I have faced from the beginning. I hope that further research papers result from attempts at resolving these issues. In the interests of clarity, I have presented the methodological limitations individually.

A- Lack of Available or Reliable Data

I consider the scarcity of resources to be one of the most surmountable problems any research in the field of Palestinian literature studies might face. The absence of an accessible resource about the Palestinian literary production in Arabic prohibited me from obtaining accurate figures and metadata for and on all modern Palestinian literary works. Thus, despite my best efforts, I found it impossible to derive an accurate figure for the number of socio-political nonfiction books, documentaries and films written by Palestinians. I sought the help of some writers and documentary filmmakers, but they replied that they knew of no reliable resource in Palestine for this. Had I had an accurate figure for the total number of Palestinian films, documentaries and socio-political books, I would have been able to render an accurate and complete image of Palestinian literature in English translation. This thesis provides the percentage of the Palestinian literary works in English translation, including only novels, poetry anthologies, short story collections, autobiographies, biographies, testimonials, prose texts, plays and play books.

B- Paucity of Prior Research on the Topic

Topics tackling Palestinian literature including, its roles, themes, aesthetic aspects in English language in specific are scarce. That is to say, prior studies on Palestinian literature are shallow to appropriately do more research studies on subjects relating to how Palestinian literary production defends the Palestinian question. This research encountered a paucity of resources that draw out of the importance of translating Palestinian literature into English language. Some scholars, however, recapitulated the difficulties of translating Palestinian literature due to the lack of financial support and the absence of research and translation bodies, but not in bits and pieces. Others talked briefly about the significance of translating Palestinian literature into Hebrew, for example. But no researchers have treated works in English translation from a statistical perspective during the past seven decades.

C-The Use of Information Technology

I confess that the building up of this database was a novel experience for me. The compilation of entries was not particularly complicated, but the addition of more cells and columns to encompass more comprehensive information about the translators hindered me from providing more data about the translators each. In fact, after I had started analysing the data, I noticed that the database was missing information about the nationalities of the translators. Had the database included this data, it would have improved that Palestinian literature received some attention of international translators, not only local. As from that I consider the contributions of non-Palestinian translators to the translating of Palestinian literature is a form of support for Palestinian citizens. Thus, translation of literature is as supportive as literature itself written for national identity of a marginalized society.

D- The Lack of Response from Some Authors

This point deserves mention since it is one of the reasons that prohibited me from conducting a thorough analysis of the results. As I mentioned in the methodology section and elsewhere in this thesis, I used Facebook, phone calls, emails and other social networks in an attempt at gaining some pieces of information that would have served my project well and furthered the completion of the digital database. However, some of the authors and translators did not respond to my enquiries. Therefore, one can see a number of cells on the digital database with the word 'unknown'. I am still waiting for their answers to fill up such anonymous cells.

These limitations resulted in some other findings that partially support the questions of the study. On the other hand, they resulted in some findings or implications that might be a prelude for more research studies.

6.3 Practical applications/ implications

Here, I discuss the findings that failed to support or only partially supported the research questions mentioned in the first chapter of this dissertation. I cast light on them in order to show the impact of the limitations on the study as a whole, and to encourage other researchers or institutions to engage themselves in researches that could fully answer to some questions raised by this research .

It is significant to point out that I conducted a large scale statistical study that comprised the real corpus of Arabic-Palestinian literature, including novels, short story collections, poetry anthologies, plays, prose text books, autobiographies, biographies and testimonials since 1948 and adopted the form of an appendix at the end of this research. I cannot deny that the statistics this study covered served this project largely, but I am excluding completely from my study the volume of socio-political nonfiction books, documentaries and films. Whilst it would clearly be a rich area for research, it lies outside the scope of the present study.

Despite the significant role the database of this project plays in tracing the course of English translation of Palestinian literature, it still has some deficiencies. Thus, the most urgent task is the on-going updating and extension of the digital database so as it makes it a comprehensive source on Palestinian-English translation literature. These efforts to extend and continually update the database do not require thorough research, but individual and institutional endeavours by authors, translators and those who are acquainted with Palestinian literature in English-language translation.

Out of the numbers of Arabic-Palestinian literary works, including novels, short story collections, poetry anthologies, plays, autobiographies, biographies, prose texts books and testimonials, 4.6% of Palestinian literary works were rendered into English language. This result did not allow a satisfactory reply to the question of how the English translations advocate for the Palestinian question, as Palestinian literature is identity per se. The relationship between translation and literature is positive; the more literature is conveyed and read in English language, the more will translation advocate for certain issues. On that, Holland (2011, para.12) affirms, “more works in translation means that more people have access to the world's best literature; it helps foster understanding across cultures.” Now, the case is how many people around the world read that 4.6%, and how this translates into a change of awareness. This will be the responsibility of publishers to reach a larger non-Arab audience, and the role of translators and translation institutions to choose for English translation the topics that focus on the harsh life of Palestinian citizens as well as their hopes and expectations.

According to what has hitherto mentioned, the following section sheds light on the need for undertaking serious actions and measurements that increase the production of Palestinian literature, improve the position of Palestinian literature in English translation, and multiply its readership in translation.

6.4 Recommendations

In this subchapter, I bring the project to a conclusion that will hopefully form a springboard for further projects in the fields of literary studies in general and translation studies in particular. This section addresses the relevant authorities, authors, translators, and other literary scholars possibly able to act on these recommendations, as I hope that doing so could reverse the decline in interest in Palestinian literature and translation of it alike. Furthermore, acting on the following recommendations could bridge the gaps that this research has failed to fill. Acting on these recommendations would also provide a means of arriving at more precise figures on all Palestinian literary works, including films, documentaries and socio-political nonfiction book, in English translation.

I make four main recommendations that, acted upon, would lead to the development of a complete, accurate and full image of Palestinian literature in English translation:

1. Urgently undertake a statistical study of socio-political nonfiction books, films and documentaries that could be later annexed to this research and database. By acting on this recommendation we will be able to derive an exact percentage of the English-language translations of films, documentaries and socio-political nonfiction books since 1948, as the previous percentage 4.6% excludes these literary genres due to reasons I have already mentioned in the subsection section (6.3.1)
2. The filling up of the empty cells on the digital catalogue which you can find on <http://dbwebgen.nenotec.com/?table=translation&mode=list>. It could be the task of whoever goes on this website. Getting complete information on Palestinian literature in English translation will make it a more reliable resource for a larger audiences.
3. Make more efforts to gather previously translated Palestinian literary works, especially single poems and short stories, and publish them in books or anthologies. This would reinforce Palestinian identity and make it known as more publishing houses and readers might convey the justice of Palestinians' cause. Via translated Palestinian literature, we can draw the attention of non-Arab readers to the daily suffering of Palestinians mentioned in literary works such as in Mordechai's Moustache and his Wife's Cats by Mahmoud Shuqayr in 2007 and The Dupes film, directed by Tawfiq Saleh in 1972, and others.
4. Due to the role Palestinian literature plays to represent the Palestinian cause and since the digital catalogue states only about 4.6% of Palestinian literature has been translated into English, this research calls for concerted action towards putting an end to the neglect of Palestinian literature at an international level provided that translation must be qualified. Thus, this project is looking at issues ranging from training graduate translators, employing more translators, professionalising translation, fair and objective distributions of future translations, raising the awareness of cultural, educational and publishing institutions of the significance of making their literature universal, and the status of translators to the area of, for example, presenting literature live in events such as literary festivals.

In summary, this research has focused on the Palestinian body of literature as a way of giving expression to the daily life of Palestinians within and beyond Palestine. The narrower focus on English-language renditions of Palestinian literature stems from a belief that such translations are a vehicle for universality. Of methodological importance to this research is a shift in focus from close readings of Palestinian literature in English translation to distant reading, such that we can gain an overall, quantitative view of the field. This is conducted via the employment of the methods of the digital humanities in the presentation of the literary archive that Palestinian literary works in English-language translations from 1948 until 2019 form as a body of work. The present research also considers English-language translations of Palestinian literature to be a method for the presentation of the Palestinian people with unrivalled potential; provided that such translations find their ways into the hands of non-Arab readership, that they may reshape political sympathies. I urge that Palestinians literati, translators, local and international institutions take all necessary steps in striving for the conveying and publishing of Palestinian literature in the English language for the reason that it is constitutive of the national identity of Palestinian citizens at home and in the diaspora.
